Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER a four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Flatfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karlsen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karlsen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Permanent unit to review social services urged

The creation of a permanent commission to provide continuous evaluation of social service programs has been recommended by a special committee studying social services in Arlington Heights.

The Arlington Heights Village Board will conduct a joint meeting tonight with the social services committee, headed by former Village Pres. Ralph Clabour, to review the committee's final report. Representatives from the senior citizens' commission, youth council and housing commission have been invited.

The meeting will begin at 8 p.m. at the municipal building, 33 S. Arlington Heights Rd.

THE COMMITTEE in October recommended that the village curtail many of its social service programs because other governmental bodies are performing the same functions.

The interim report recommendations were:

- Discontinue the senior citizens' transportation program because of the free bus service offered by Wheeling and Elk Grove townships;

- Have the village administration monitor senior citizen programs rather than hire a senior citizen coordinator and staff because of referral services offered by Wheeling Township and recreational programs offered by the Arlington Heights Park District;

- Financial participation of the youth service program should be phased out so that in two years the township will cover the entire cost of the program;

- Costs of the Youth Uplift program should be decreased by utilizing Omm-House: Youth Services Bureau where possible;

- Financial participation of the counselor-in-the-park program should be gradually phased out and picked up by the park district.

According to the special committee's final report, "Most of the services provided by the village are for youth and senior citizens, serving 22.3 per cent and 5 per cent, respectively, of the population, at a cost to the village of approximately $188,071 annually."

A permanent social services commission is needed to evaluate budget requests and make recommendations to the village board, the report states.

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty good and confident, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Howlett loan probe planned

by STEVE BROWN
The chairman of the Illinois Racing Board Sunday said he will investigate the legality of loans made to Sec. of State Michael J. Howlett by the Nationwide Acceptance Corp., a finance company which owns stock in a harness racing corporation. Anthony Scariano told The Herald that charges leveled by Gov. Daniel Walker that Howlett, his Democratic primary opponent, accepted the loans from a company that is barred by law from making funds available to politicians, are "worth looking into." Howlett has disclosed he received a series of loans totaling $100,000 in 1972, 1974 and 1975 from the finance company. The firm owns 6,944 shares of stock in the Fox Valley Trotting Assn.

made to Howlett in 1972 violates the state's legal lending limit for personal loans. That investigation was started after The Herald reported the state does not permit finance companies like Nationwide Acceptance to make personal loans over $10,000.

Howlett aides contend the Nationwide loan was a business loan, but Howlett has admitted paying federal income taxes on the funds raised to repay the loan. The Internal Revenue Service does not require candidates to pay income taxes on campaign contributions unless the money is used for personal reasons.

Walker contended Howlett knew the Nationwide loans were improper because applications for racing dates, which list all stockholders, are filed with the secretary of state's office as well as with the racing board.

The governor refused to find any comparison between the Howlett loans and loans Walker has received from persons who do business with the state.

"Even if the racing board should determine this is not a technical violation of the law, it is clearly wrong in the State of Illinois, it is wrong for a high public office to take a $100,000 loan from a corporation which owns so much race track stock in view of the history of corruption, I think the public would say it is wrong to do this," Walker said.

Fox Valley Trotting Assn. was the source of controversy in 1973.

Some members of the racing board argued then that the group should not be awarded racing dates because it did not own a track. It was also noted that several Fox Valley stockholders had ties to the Empire Sportservice Corp., a concessions company that has been linked with federal investigators to organized crime.

ILLINOIS LAW forbids race track stockholders from making any sort of gift or contribution of any kind to any person considering campaigning for, or holding public office.

Scariano, who was appointed by Walker, said the law was put into effect in 1972. He said the board has never studied the question of loans from race track stockholders to politicians.

However, the state election law relating to campaign contributions defines contributions to include "a gift, subscription, donation, dues, loans, advances or deposit of money or anything of value . . ."

The governor said Howlett has "put himself in back to race track interests." He said the transaction was "clearly wrong," but stopped short of saying Howlett had taken part in an illegal act.

"That is for the racing board to determine," he said.

Ed Reynolds, a Howlett press aide, almost immediately branded the accusations as "a character assassination by a governor doomed to political extinction. A vicious attempt to destroy the integrity of a man who has proved to 11 million people of this state that his honor and ability as a public official are above reproach." The aides declined to comment on the specifics of the charges.

THE RACING board probe is the second to be raised by a state agency involving the Howlett loans. The Illinois Dept. of Financial Institutions is trying to determine if a $75,000 loan

Area man 'critical' with shotgun wound

A Palatine Township man was critically injured early Sunday after accidentally shooting himself with a shotgun, police said. Spokesmen for Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, said William A. Langrehr, 64, 162 S. Elm Rd., underwent surgery Sunday for facial injuries and was transferred to an intensive-care unit where he was listed in critical condition. Details of the mishap, reported to have occurred shortly before 8 a.m., were unavailable from Cook County Sheriff's Police.

Village gears for Ford visit

Buffalo Grove is awaiting an appearance by President Ford, and village Police Chief Harry J. Walsh is expecting a visit by Secret Service agents this week to coordinate security. Walsh said he expects to be in touch with Secret Service officials to discuss the lavish security measures that usually accompany a presidential visit. Ford is to appear 8 p.m. Friday at Buffalo Grove High School, Arlington Heights and Dundee roads. Ford's opponent, Ronald Reagan, is scheduled to appear at Elk Grove High School at 7 p.m. Thursday. He will address the Elk Grove Assn. of Industry and Commerce Friday.

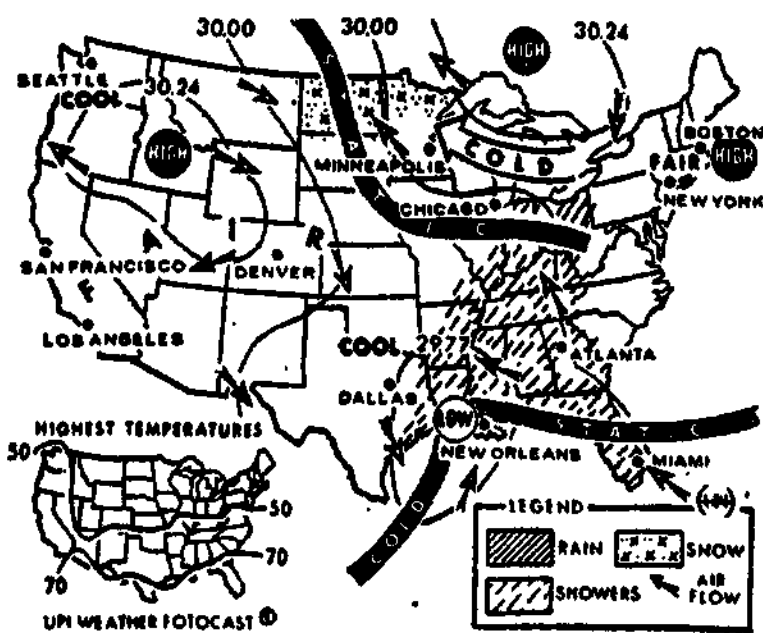

Regner proposes bounty law

State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, has introduced legislation proposing a $5,000 bounty offer to any family receiving public aid benefits who agrees in writing to leave Illinois and not return for three years. Regner said the program will reduce state welfare spending. "The lump sum of $5,000 will attract many of the cheaters and encourage them to leave the state at once," Regner said. The measure is expected to stir controversy in the upcoming session of the Illinois General Assembly. State Rep. Virginia Macdonald, R-Arlington Heights, who frequently handles Regner's bills in the Illinois House, said Regner "might have to find someone else to handle this one," when told about the new legislation.

Mikva asks probe of gun funds

U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, D-10th, has asked the Government Accounting Office to determine if any federal funds are being used to subsidize the National Rifle Assn. Mikva, an advocate of strong gun-control laws, says the U.S. House Ways and Means Committee has approved legislation which would require states to spend up to $11 million annually on shooting ranges throughout the country. State-owned ranges are frequently operated in connection with the NRA, he said. Mikva said the committee's legislation calls for the use of 50 per cent of excise taxes collected on the sale of guns, bows and arrows, and fishing equipment, to be spent on shooting ranges and hunter firearm safety programs. The remaining 50 per cent of the money would be used for wildlife conservation programs.

Sudden death prospect throws time into 'slow motion'

IOWA CITY, Iowa (UPI) — The prospect of imminent and sudden death seems to switch time into slow motion and speed thought processes, occasionally bringing back vivid images of the past, according to two University of Iowa researchers.

Dr. Russell Noyes, associate professor of psychiatry, and Roy Kleitl, clinical psychologist, studied 104 persons who have undergone 114 life-threatening situations.

The most frequently reported phenomenon was a slowing of "external time," they said. Simultaneously, the researchers said, thought processes raced and, for a few, mental images from the past appeared so quickly and vividly to the threatened person that there was almost a re-experiencing of the events depicted.

The researchers, outlining their findings in a recent issue of "Psychiatry" magazine, said another feeling experienced by many was a sense of detachment from the life-threatening events, a feeling of "standing off to the side, observing."

There were 70 men and 34 women in the study. The average age was 24 at the time of the nearly fatal incident, almost half of which involved falls during mountain climbing.

Other incidents included near drownings, auto accidents, battlefield experiences, cardiac arrests and severe allergic reactions.

One of the study participants, a race car driver whose car went out of control and flipped over at 100 miles per hour, said the mishap seemed to take forever. "Everything was in slow motion and it seemed to me like I was a player on a stage and I could see myself tumbling over and over in the car," he said. "It was like I sat in the stands and saw it all happening."

The victim of an auto accident said she initially felt fear, "then I saw an endless stream of experiences. There must have been hundreds go through my mind and they were all pleasant. During all of this time, time stood still."

A man who shot himself accidentally said the room "filled with people who weren't actually there, including a girlfriend, a cousin and my grandmother. They all appeared as they normally would, but none seemed to notice me. My attention became riveted on my early life."

Although fear was felt early in the experience, the persons soon found themselves calm, the researchers said. After the initial shock had passed, most of the emotions reported were subdued with many persons finding themselves calm and peaceful.

'Violent stage' for Panama Canal hinted

Panamanian strongman Gen. Omar Torrijos warned Sunday that if current negotiations on turning control of the U.S.-administered Panama Canal over to Panama fall "we would have to resort to the violent stage." In an interview on Colombian radio, Torrijos said he has so far restrained his country's young people's anger over the Panama Canal but the new generation has sworn an oath to recover the Canal Zone "at any cost." The Panama Zone, which is 10 miles wide and 40 miles long, is under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Army. The canal was opened in 1914.

Israel issues strong protest to Kissinger

Israel issued a strong protest to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger against reported U.S. plans to sell sophisticated weapons to Egypt, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told his cabinet Sunday. A government communiqué said Rabin instructed Simha Dinitz, Israel's U.S. ambassador, to relay to Kissinger "the strongest opposition to intended sale of U.S. weaponry to Egypt." The protest was issued after Rabin briefed his cabinet on Israel's diplomatic efforts to stop the sales.

In the U.S., meantime, Time Magazine reported that Kissinger was almost ready to resign last December until the President urged him to stay on. Time said "Last December he (Kissinger) came so close to giving up his job that only President Ford's personal urging stopped him."

'Buffer force' surrounds Lebanese town

Lebanese and Palestinian troops set up a buffer zone around a Christian town Sunday ending three days of clashes that imperiled the civil war cease-fire and provoked the first post-truce mutinies by Christian soldiers. A joint Lebanese and Palestine Liberation Army force ringed the northern village of Kobbat, scene of the worst fighting between Christian and Moslem militiamen since the Syrian-mediated truce was announced six weeks ago.

Simon praises Anwar Sadat in Egypt

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon Sunday praised a "courageous" Anwar Sadat for ending Egypt's economic dependency on Moscow and encouraging private enterprise, but predicted "short-term grief" in overcoming existing problems. The 48-year-old secretary, speaking to Cairo reporters before departing for Rome at the end of a week-long Middle East tour, stressed that sound economic systems in Egypt and elsewhere in the region would complement the search for a just and lasting peace.

Tito hails Marxist victory in Angola

President Josip Tito of Yugoslavia, meeting on a tiny Adriatic island with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro Sunday, hailed the Marxist victory in Angola but stopped short of endorsing Cuba's intervention. Castro came to Yugoslavia, according to Western sources, to patch up differences with Tito over Cuba's decision to send 12,000 soldiers to fight in the Angolan civil war.

Rumsfeld backs B1 bomber program

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld warns it would be a major strategic mistake for Congress to scrap the B1 manned bomber program. The B1, which is now beginning test flights and is to be deployed after 1980, is a prime target for congressmen seeking to cut the 1977 defense budget. Defense officials estimate the planes will cost $85 million each by the time they are deployed. In response to critics such as Ronald Reagan who contend the Soviets are ahead militarily, Rumsfeld said, "That is not true. The United States has today what we can accurately describe as 'rough equivalence.' I know of no significant disagreement with that fact."

Arabs, oil chiefs discuss firm's takeover

Top officials of the four U.S. partners in the Arabian American Oil Co. met Sunday in Panama City, Fla. with Saudi Arabia's oil minister to discuss final arrangements for Saudi takeover of the petroleum production giant. Guards armed with shotguns patrolled the resort where the negotiations were conducted. The meeting was expected to continue for as long as four days and a well informed source who confirmed the Arabian negotiations said, "There could be a signing" of a final takeover.

Group 'optimistic' about peace on Cyprus

Members of a congressional delegation to the Middle East said in Washington Sunday they were "guardedly optimistic" about chances for peace on Cyprus. But a report filed by the delegation added: "Regrettably, we gained no evidence to suggest renewed negotiations on Cyprus will quickly produce any dramatic breakthroughs." The seven-member delegation also said Egyptian and Israeli leaders favored the step-by-step peace process in the Middle East. U.S. economic assistance in both countries "is a worthy investment toward an eventual Middle East settlement," they said.

Loses bout with pneumonia

Wright Patman dead at 82

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., the 82-year-old dean of the House of Representatives who was stripped of his powerful committee chairmanship last year, died Sunday after a two-week bout with pneumonia.

A liberal reformer of the 1930s, Patman chaired the important House Banking Committee for a dozen years. But another generation of reformers in 1975 gave the post to Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis.

Patman announced Jan. 14 he would not seek a 25th term from the East Texas district from which he first was elected in 1928. A special election will be held to fill the remainder of his term.

He was the senior member of Congress in length of service, although Indiana Democrat Ray J. Madden, at age 84, was the oldest member. Rep. George Mahon, D-Tex., who was elected in 1934, now has most seniority.

A spokesman said Patman died at 4:45 a.m. EST at Bethesda Naval Hospital, where he had been admitted Feb. 24 with pneumonia.

His body Sunday night was flown to Texarkana, Tex., where funeral services will be held Wednesday at the First Baptist Church.

Survivors include the widow, Pauline Tucker Patman; three sons, Texas State Sen. William Patman of Gansado; Connor Patman of Texarkana, Tex., an attorney-realtor; and Harold Patman of Austin, Tex., a geologist; five grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

"No member who serves in the House during this century will make a more enduring impact on the House of Representatives and the nation than Wright Patman," Speaker Carl Albert said after learning of his colleague's death.

"His legislative contributions in many fields are legion and will endure for years. All of us in the House regret he was unable to enjoy with his family and friends the retirement he looked forward to at the end of this year."

Patman was born at Patman's Switch in Cass County, Tex., Aug. 6, 1893. After taking a law degree from Cumberland University in 1916, he enlisted as a "doughboy" to fight the Kaiser's Germany in Europe.

He was mustered out at the end of World War I in 1919. Patman married Merle Connor of Winboro, Tex. the same year and the couple had three sons.

Patman's first wife died July 2, 1967. Fifteen months later, Oct. 9, 1968, he married Pauline Tucker of Texarkana.

He served four years in the Texas Legislature and was a district attorney for Texas' 5th judicial district for five years before winning election to Congress in 1928, the year before the Great Depression. Calvin Coolidge was president when Patman came to Washington.

Patman devoted his congressional career to battling what he called "monopoly and concentration of economic power."

1st class mail 'may become luxury'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar warned Sunday first class mail may become a luxury unless the public faces economic reality and agrees to accept basic cuts in mail service.

"If the public elects to continue the postal system in its present form, it will have to pay a steep price," Bailar said. "It may find the first class stamp becoming a luxury item in the next decade."

Bailar issued his warning in a speech prepared for delivery Monday before the Economic Club of Detroit. The text was released Sunday by the Postal Service.

Unless basic changes are made, he said, the postal system may be destroyed by rising fuel and labor costs, growing numbers of delivery points and resulting rate increases which, in turn, are causing mail volume to decline.

"I believe we must reevaluate traditional concepts of mail service to see if they have value in modern America," Bailar said. He posed these questions:

• "Do all Americans really need six-day-a-week delivery . . . to our front doors?"

• "Do we really need 40,000 post offices, stations and branches?"

• "Should all first class letters cost the same? Should a metered, typewritten, zip-coded bulk mailing cost the same amount per piece as individual correspondence?"

Because of previous postage rate increases, some heavy mail users are trying ideas such as delivering magazines privately and making payments by electronic transfers between banks, Bailar said.

"Our mail volume for 1974, slightly over 90 billion pieces, will probably stand forever as our peak," Bailar said, "for we project that over the next five years, volume will slump to 83 or 84 billion and never recover."

The Postal Service, ordered by Congress to break even by 1984, is cutting costs to defer further self-defeating rate increases as long as possible, Bailar said.

It has eliminated 19,000 nonessential jobs, stopped new hiring, shifted excess personnel to other areas, eliminated almost all overtime, stopped new building and begun closing marginal post offices, Bailar said.

So far, he said, the service has not attempted any economy that would reduce service. But the concept of continuing service as before, regardless of whether it is really needed, must be re-evaluated, he said.

Soliah hopes to testify about his relationship with Patty

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Steven Frederick Soliah, the housepainter whose bank robbery trial is scheduled to begin Tuesday, hopes to testify about his relationship with Patricia Hearst and he may shed light on her "lost year."

"My hope is that I will be able to testify in court, if my lawyers feel I should, and I will talk about what my part is in this whole thing," said Soliah when asked about his association with Miss Hearst.

Soliah was sharing his San Francisco apartment with Miss Hearst at the time of her arrest.

His San Francisco attorneys, Sheldon Otis and Stephen Imhoff, said they have made no decision on whether Soliah, free on $100,000 bail, will take the witness stand.

If Soliah does, "A lot of people will be surprised by the truth," said Otis.

Jack Ford won't try local Jamaican 'pot'

• President Ford's son, Jack, in Montego Bay, Jamaica on a business trip, assured Jamaican authorities Sunday he would not sample locally grown marijuana during his stay. Ford is in Jamaica to tour resorts in his capacity as a consultant for a travel agency.

• Philadelphia called on home-grown royalty Saturday to add a special touch to its bicentennial Flower and Garden Show. Princess Grace of Monaco — the former actress Grace Kelly — served as one of four judges in the show's pressed flower competition.

• A London newspaper Sunday said "Her Royal Hippyness" Princess Margaret was spending "long weekends at a jet-set country commune."

The newspaper said the "commune" was run by Roddy Llewellyn, with whom the Queen's sister was photographed on her recent West Indies vacation. The paper said the Princess slept in an "ornate brass bed . . ." which owner Michael Tickner gave up for the occasion. The Princess also "potted about the garden" and "sang 'Chattanooga Choo Choo' after a night in which the wine flowed freely."

Boxscore: economy not soaring, but gliding upward

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If not soaring, the economy is gliding upward, according to government figures.

Unemployment fell to its lowest in more than 12 months. Inflation held about steady. There was a slight trade deficit, but one indicating the economy was improving.

Here is a summary of the latest figures:

UNEMPLOYMENT: Fell to 7.6 per cent in February, the lowest in more than a year, while employment returned to the pre-recession peak of 88.3 million in July of 1974. That meant 7.1 million persons were unemployed. February was a 0.2 per cent improvement from January's 7.8 per cent. The December figure was 8.3. The February improvement meant 150,000 persons went back to work. Despite recent declines, unemployment is historically high — only a 27 per cent recovery from the recession.

INFLATION: At about 7 per cent; 1974's high was 9.7. The Consumer Price Index, the measure of inflation, stood at 166.7 in January, meaning that anything costing $100 in 1967 would cost $166.70 in December.

PERSONAL INCOME: Wages, salaries, investments and other sources of income rose in January by $13.6 billion to an adjusted annual rate of $1.3 trillion. Of the increase, $9 billion came when 800,000 workers were added to the employment rolls in January. The 1 per cent rise was nearly triple the $4.7 billion of December and was the largest gain since September.

WHOLESALE PRICES: Food and fuel prices fell, bringing the wholesale price index down 0.5 per cent in February, the biggest monthly fall in about a year — and the fourth straight month without an increase. In February, the index was 179.40, 4.7 per cent higher than a year ago, and meaning $100 in wholesale goods in 1967 now cost $179.40.

TRADE: January has a small deficit of $73 million, the first deficit in a year. U.S. had a record $11 billion annual trade surplus in 1975. The deficit came on increased oil and vehicle imports, indicating the economy is strong.

INDICATORS: Index of leading business indicators rose 2.2 per cent in January, the biggest gain in six months. The index, which charts the direction of the economy, is virtually unchanged since rising 2.5 per cent last July. The index measures 11 sectors of the economy, of which nine showed increases in January.

GNP: The real Gross National Product — GNP stripped of inflation — rose 4.9 per cent in the last quarter of 1975, the second-largest increase since the first quarter of 1973 (the third quarter of 1975 was 13.2 per cent). The Commerce Department earlier estimated the fourth-quarter rise at 5.4 per cent, but yald the 4.9 figure was based on "more complete information." The 1975 over-all GNP — the nation's total output of goods and services — fell 2 per cent from 1974, to $1,216 trillion. But economists predict real GNP will grow at 6-7 per cent most of 1976, enough to avert slipping back into recession.

What's with test scores?

that could test relevant knowledge you'd find students today know far more than the student of 10 years ago."

High school students have been taking the Scholastic Aptitude Tests for years, using their scores to gain entry into college. Nationally and locally SAT scores have declined. Scored on a 200- to 800 point scale, national norm scores have fallen from 479 for verbal and 502 for math in 1962, to 434 for verbal and 472 for math last year.

Dist. 214 averaged scores of 471 for verbal and 519 for math four years ago; last year those scores were 443 in verbal and 517 in math.

High School Dist. 207 reported an average score of 518 in verbal and 560 in math in 1965. By last year those scores dropped to 473 in verbal and 540 in math.

DIST. 207 also reports that freshman scores on the Iowa Test of Education Development have dropped during the past 13 years. Freshmen this year entered high school three semesters behind their 1962 counterparts.

Most Northwest suburban districts begin mass standardized testing in the third grade. One of the most common tests in the area is the Iowa Test of Basic Skills — a battery of tests aimed at five basic skills from reading to work study skills to math.

Districts such as Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21, Des Plaines Dist. 62 and Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 have all seen drops in their Iowa scores.

But Marjorie Beu, Dist. 21 assistant superintendent in charge of curriculum, said districts get caught up in the prestige of having high or above average scores.

"We get so used to a passing score being 70 per cent we get all upset with a 50th percentile," she said. "The nature of the test and the norming has half the students scoring above and half below the 50th percentile."

RATHER THAN just accepting the test scores — even if they are high — Miss Beu said a district should take a concentrated look at what the test is checking and what the district thinks is important.

Dist. 21 uses the test for comparing the district nationally. The district also receives an "item analysis" on the Iowa basics which shows what percentage of students get each answer correct. If a large number of students get an answer wrong, the district checks to see if that question covers an important skill. If it does, teachers and administrators work to improve the program in that area.

Dwight Hall, Mount Prospect Dist. 57 assistant superintendent, said Dist. 57 uses the tests to look for strengths and weaknesses in their education program. The district sets a test score goal, using a complex formula based on student IQ scores and generally meets it.

Hall said standardized tests have their limitations and cover only a small part of a student's studies. Science, social studies, music and art are not covered in the exams although skills that promote success in those subjects sometimes are included.

DIST. 62 DOESN'T "put too much stock into a single test," said Robert Peterson who works with the testing program. The Iowa is given in the fall as just one more way to give teachers information about students academic skills.

Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 is studying the validity of the test and will determine whether it should even be given to students in the future.

Christensen points out that the test might not check skills the district stresses or it might test these skills in a way that doesn't get valid results.

He cites an Iowa district with poor spelling scores that discovered students could spell but couldn't understand how to answer the test questions.

THE IOWA students learned spelling by memorizing lists of words and writing them down when given them orally during tests. The standardized test required them to pick which of four words was misspelled.

Teachers changed to the standardized test method of learning spelling and the following year student scores went up significantly.

Oliver Cummings, regional coordinator of measurement and guidance for the Iowa Test of Basic Skills, says the test is a valid tool for measuring student abilities in the basic skills.

"The test is sound in its theoretical construction and tests, what it says it tests — the basics," he said. "If school districts say basic skills are important and say that this test tests the basic skills, then it is valid.

HE SAID, however, "there's undo amount of power given to the test results. There also is overreaction to the problem of accountability. People in education equate accountability with test scores."

Cummings agreed the tests should not be the sole criteria used for evaluating a school district's program or an individual student's abilities. He said it should be one of many tools used to measure these things.

Cummings said districts should give students the opportunity to practice for the tests so they can become familiar with the types of questions and the "mechanics."

"If the test is to be useful, it cannot be so mystical that kids and schools are so uptight they can't function on the test," he said.

Whether scores are valid or not, parents want to know what they are. Some districts refuse to release test scores and many parents see this as a coverup of a poor educational program. Districts that do release scores generally endure weeks of criticism and complaints from parents.

DISTRICTS "do a real disservice to youngsters, parents and the district by reporting numerical scores that even educators have difficulty interpreting," said Miss Beu. "We need to give the public a valid interpretation of the scores."

Christensen said such an interpretation is difficult since even teachers misinterpret test results.

"The people outside the school operation are saying, you're hiding something, if we don't give out results. People inside are saying, we don't know what they mean."

Standardized tests still going strong

Your hands got damp, your throat turned dry and pencils were clutched in fear.

The long answer sheets were passed out with the maze of dots that soon had to be filled in — or not filled in — correctly. And then came the test booklets with the severe warning from the teacher not to peek inside until she said "go."

Good old Iowa test day. Most adults remember those days when they were told to get plenty of sleep so they could do their very best and show how much knowledge they had gained.

LITTLE HAS changed over the years for this multi-million dollar business. The number of companies has expanded and the types of tests being given have multiplied to the point administrators now need a thick guide to figure out which test they should give.

But the standardized test is an integral part of American education. From the time a student enters school until he earns his last graduate degree from college, he is confronted by the tests to determine his aptitude, knowledge of the basic skills or figure out his IQ.

The standardized test came into the forefront of education following World War II when universities needed a method to evaluate the influx of college hopefuls.

Today, colleges still use standardized tests as one way to evaluate their applicants. School districts also use the standardized test to measure everything from their national standing by percentile rank to the effectiveness of their education program.

MOST EXAMS are given by the students' teacher. To figure out the mystical 50th percentile and what score should fall into which percentile, testing companies take a sampling of students from across the country. The students are given the test under the same conditions as it will be given in the classroom. The companies say this method of "norming" holds up because it allows for differences in the classroom setting.

While testing companies provide services to score and analyze the data, many districts also have the teacher score the exam.

The "raw" score, or the number of questions a student answers correctly, is then plugged into a formula that figures a student's national percentile ranking. The Iowa Test of Basic Skills also uses a numerical score that shows what grade level and month a student is at in the skill tests. For instance, a 4.6 numerical score shows a student is at the sixth month of the fourth-grade level in that skill.

The tests are multiple-choice with students having to select the correct answer and fill in the corresponding circle on the answer sheet.

College entrance exams have a similar structure and content but also offer tests on specific subjects like foreign languages, English, natural sciences and history.

And for many students, each time the booklets are passed out and the blur of dots confronts them, the palms get damp, the throat turns dry . . .

Look for comet Saturday

Another chance to see the light

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

Retiring to Arizona next month

by JOE SWICKARD

Roger Burke: the name has meant community involvement in Arlington Heights for a quarter-of-a-century.

"I guess you could say I'm not a sinner-arounder. I like to get involved and to be active," Burke said.

Next month, he will leave Arlington Heights to take up residence in Sun City, Ariz. His 25 years in the village have left their mark wherever one looks.

BORN TWO MONTHS before the San Francisco earthquake, he grew up in Berkeley Hills overlooking that city.

His mother was the only woman on the Committee of 100 that rewrote the San Francisco charter.

His father was vice president of the Southern Pacific R.R. and had a ranch in the California mountains. The spread adjoined land owned by William Randolph Hearst, and young Burke spent a summer as paymaster for the San Simeon construction crews.

A tennis nut, as he described himself, he went to work for Wilson, the sporting goods company. He rose to be general credit manager and eventually vice president.

HE CAME TO town in 1951, and the place hasn't been the same. Burke served eight years on the Arlington Heights Dist. 25 Board of Education, including a year as president. He served on a citizens committee for High School Dist. 214 when it came time to build Wheeling High School.

Burke was there when the caucus political organization began. Never a village trustee, he nevertheless would have liked the task — "a hell of a challenge," he said.

The days of baseball on vacant lots were over when the Arlington Heights Boys' Baseball Assn. was formed. He served as its president and a coach.

He was a man in a game for boys and he wanted it to stay that way. Rejection of the national Little League organization was in order because the pressure of state and national competition for children did not sit well with him.

A game for boys, and they all played no matter how awkward or clumsy. Some parents did not like it, but the game was for the youngsters, he said.

RETIREMENT IS unnatural idleness for the son of a California pioneer. Burke began a term as treasurer for the Arlington Heights Park District.

Village insurance costs jump 42%; more hikes seen

Premiums for workmen's compensation insurance carried by the Village of Arlington Heights have jumped more than 42 per cent in the past year, and another substantial increase may come this spring.

Kenneth Bonder, village finance director, said the Illinois Workmen's Compensation Act of 1975 is directly responsible for the soaring rates.

Bonder said the village paid $36,800 for coverage last year. To date, Arlington Heights has paid $52,900, with another upward premium adjustment expected.

THE VILLAGE made a $37,600 deposit on its premium last July, which is part of the current fiscal year. Bonder said the village later had to pay additional premiums of $14,700 to provide adequate coverage.

Bonder said another upward adjustment of $10,000 to $14,000 is expected this spring.

The revised law has two major changes causing the sudden jumps in the insurance rates, said Gregory Ford, village personnel director.

Ford said the new law removed the previous maximum payment of $34,000 for a work-related injury or death, and now includes payment for injuries or illnesses not only caused by work situations, but those "aggravated" by working.

AN EMPLOYEE'S COLD that leads to pneumonia because of working would now be eligible for compensation under the revised law, he said.

Previously, the illness or injury had to be caused by the work situation. The "aggravation" section of the Illinois law makes it "unique in the country," Ford said.

"All that's needed, as I understand it, is certification from a doctor that the condition was worsened by working," he said.

EMPLOYEES MAY NOW seek their own doctor for the necessary examinations and certification. The old law required use of the employer's physician.

Ford described the new higher insurance premiums as "really bruising" not only for governments, but private industry as well.

In an effort to lessen the "bruising," Bonder said the village, the Arlington Heights Park District and the Arlington Heights Memorial Library are "pooling" their insurance for the upcoming fiscal year.

It is hoped that by having the "pool," all governmental bodies will receive more favorable rates than they would be able to get individually, Bonder said.

HE SAID THE NEW, higher rates will be reflected in the municipal budget now being studied by the village board.

"It's (the additional payments) just something you have to cope with. It just took away that much more money," he said.

Park aid subject of meeting tonight

The Arlington Heights-Mount Prospect Area League of Women Voters tonight will examine the financial resources available to local park districts.

The meeting will be at 7:45 p.m. at the home of Jan Yauch, 703 E. Shabonee Tr., Mount Prospect. A second meeting will be held at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Congregational United Church of Christ, 1001 Kirchoff Rd., Arlington Heights. The public is invited.

Roger Burke

$9,300 asked for weed war fund

Weeds, just like inflation, keep shooting up and the Arlington Heights village administration has requested an additional $9,300 to keep the unruly and unwanted plants under control this summer.

Last year, the village allocated $8,000 to cut the weeds, but spent $9,693 on the jobs by the time the last one was felled. The village is asking for $9,300 to keep the vacant lots around town trimmed and neat this year.

The village hopes to recoup most of the expenditure by billing the owners of the vacant lots for the task.

A long, hot summer, coupled with a late frost aggravated the weed situation last summer, said George Weinand, village health director.

"We didn't get a good, killing frost until into November. As long as it was as mild as it was, there is going to be continued growth," Weinand said.

"The simple solution would be not to cut them at all, but that would be unsightly," he said.

BUT TO KEEP the vacant lots slightly and hayfever under control, the village contracts with two private firms to keep the weeds cut.

By the time the private companies have cut the 300 individual lots at least once, and many as often as three or four times, the village has a big bill on its hands.

"But you have to remember that most of the amount is recovered through billings and liens," Weinand said.

Under village regulations, landowners are notified that their property is harboring felonious ferns. If the weeds remain unfelled, the village assigns the lot to one of the contractors for trimming. The fee is about $25 for a 50-by-125-foot lot.

The village then submits a bill to the owner. If the account is not settled, a lien is placed on the land. The encumbered land cannot be sold, nor building permits issued until the debt is settled.

THE VILLAGE legal department lists 8 liens that still must be cleared.

Weinand said the village does not cut the vacant lots itself because of the cost in terms of equipment and manpower.

"You'd need a tractor mower and at least two more men," he said.

He estimated the cost of a cutting tractor, properly outfitted, at $30,000 to $50,000. One man would drive the rig, while the other would patrol in front to make sure debris and trash did not ruin the equipment.

The health department's $10,000 request will be considered when the village board takes up the municipal budget for 1976-77.

While those weed seeds are just lying in the ground waiting for spring, Weinand isn't going to let anything grow under his feet.

ENDORSEMENTS

Candidates to be examined in week-long series of editorial recommendations

The Herald today begins its endorsements of candidates in the March 16 primary election. These endorsements will continue through Saturday.

In most races we will offer a strong recommendation for an individual candidate or attempt to guide voters to the better qualified candidates. In a few races we will offer no recommendation.

The process of analyzing and reporting on political contests involves most of The Herald's 77-member news staff. At the state, county and local levels, candidates are invited to our offices for in-depth interviews.

Development of endorsement positions involves fewer than a dozen persons, including the Editorial Board, which formulates positions and recommends them to Herald management.

Guiding our judgment is The Herald's policy on editorials, which reads in part:

"Officially and in practice Paddock Publications newspapers are independent of any political party or special interest group . . . in terms of advocacy, (they) are oriented to issues and how they touch the people of the communities the newspapers serve. Traditionally, the newspapers have been committed to the protection of individual liberties; equality of opportunity; responsible government responsive to the public need; orderly and well-planned communities; excellence in public education; equitable taxation; a functioning two-party system; citizen participation in government and community affairs; and preservation of the right of dissent."

We do not regard our judgment as sacrosanct but merely an additional — and hopefully an informed — source of opinion for our readers to weigh in making their own choices.

Herald selections in five local legislative contests

Herald endorsements begin with recommendations in local legislative district contests. Candidates selected in these primaries will represent their party in the fall contest for the Illinois House and Senate.

A note on the House contests. Under Illinois law, three representatives are chosen in each House district, two from the majority party and one from the minority.

Two Republicans and two Democrats will be selected on March 16 in each House contest; because of Republican majorities in local districts, the two Republican primary choices probably will be the final choice of voters. One of the two Democratic choices will be eliminated in November.

In the House primary, each voter has three votes to cast. He may give each of two candidates 1½ votes, or he may "bullet" by giving all three votes to one candidate he especially wants to see elected.

We have recommended "bullet" voting in several primary races where we believe local support for specific candidates is important to the election of those candidates or in contested elections where we regard only one candidate as qualified.

John Graham in Second Senate Dist.

We believe John Graham's 18 years of service in the Illinois Senate and his position in Republican Party leadership make him the most qualified candidate to again represent the 2nd District.

We have not always agreed with Graham philosophically but consider his continuing loyalty to his constituents an important legislative qualification.

He is, indeed, a true politician and in several instances he has allowed his politics to flow too prominently into his legislative function. His ongoing fight against almost every program

Governor Walker has proposed has not been productive. However, he is an able Republican leader and is a positive force in the state senate for 2nd District residents.

His opponent, Terry Ayers, is a good candidate, but seems mismatched against a seasoned legislator like Graham.

House pick is Stanley in 2nd Dist.

Roger Stanley, a Hanover Township Republican Committeeman, is the best hope for able Republican representation in the House of Representatives from the 2nd District. We urge a "bullet" vote for him in the March 16 primary.

His opponents are incumbent

John Friedland and Winfield Township Committeeman Duane G. Walter — two candidates who appear comfortable in being anonymous. Friedland has served eight years without distinction in the house, and his 100 per cent attendance record is not reason enough to reelect him. Voters who do not wish to cast a bullet should select Walter over Friedland.

Stanley is an aggressive and enthusiastic candidate. He has an excellent grasp of state-wide issues and promises to be accessible to the people of the district. He will add a fresh new dimension to the Republican slate in the 2nd District.

Schlickman: bullet vote in 4th dist.

An able and independent legislator, incumbent state representative Eugene Schlickman is the superior candidate and deserves a "bullet" vote in the 4th District Republican primary.

Throughout his six terms, Schlickman, a resident of Arlington Heights, has developed a distinguished record of service to his suburban constituents. He is courageous, sometimes outspoken; but ultimately a truly independent thinker.

He faces a challenge from four others, the most prominent Penny Pullen, who served as an administrative assistant to the late State Rep. Robert Juckett. We, however, find her far less capable than Schlickman, who needs the full support of local residents in a far-flung legislative district.

Roy Bergquist, Anne Marzullo and Gerald Rubin who also are seeking slating as Republican candidates are less qualified than Ms. Pullen.

Leverenz a top choice in Dist. 5

Incumbent Ted Leverenz has served well during his first two years as state representative from the 5th District. He deserves another term and a "bullet" vote in the Democratic primary.

He promised to become a full-time legislator, and he has followed through with that promise. He is unquestionably more qualified than incumbent Jack B. Williams of Franklin Park and John Contenduca, an Illinois department of transportation employee. Williams is the mayor of Franklin Park, and his kind of "double dipping" — serving two constituencies — should be eliminated.

The 5th District with boundaries scattered from Des Plaines to Maywood needs a strong representative. In his first two years, Leverenz has proven to be just that. We wholeheartedly support him.

Dan Pierce, Mrs. Damato in 32nd race

In the 32nd legislative district, which includes the Lake County portion of Buffalo Grove, three candidates are seeking the two Democratic nominations for state representative.

Our choices are Daniel M. Pierce and Marlene Damato.

Incumbent Pierce of Highland Park is completing his sixth term. He serves as a chairman of the Illinois House Committee on environment, energy and natural resources and served as minority whip of the Illinois House from 1971 to 1974. He has been given several Outstanding Legislator awards by the Independent Voters of Illinois.

Mrs. Damato, of Ingleside, though a newcomer, seems to have studied the issue. She favors the preservation of the environment of the district, full funding of aid to education and the equal rights amendment — and promises of make a serious run for election in November.

C. Casey Kuklinski of Wildwood, on the other hand, is a perennial candidate who lost a bid for election to the legislature in 1972. He has not addressed the issues of this campaign.

Berry's World

Reader's pleased to see local education challenged

I was elated to read in the Feb. 12 edition of The Herald that Mrs. Joan Klusmann of the Dist. 25 Board of Education is questioning the effectiveness of contemporary education. Her statement was based upon the national decline of recent student scores on achievement tests for college admittance. Many parents are also concerned that in the scramble to be "progressive," many educators have prematurely adopted too many unproven teaching concepts. I resent having public school children used as test lab specimens to substantiate some egomaniac's pet theory.

My personal observation is that while children may be receiving a more diversified education today, skimping on the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic is not a sound alternative.

If a student achieves only superficial knowledge and lacks the basic fundamentals, how can he succeed in advanced schooling. Also, being too liberal in grading is a distortion and a fraud that is a disservice to the student in the long run.

I would like to recommend the following improvements:

- Stress the basic fundamentals at the expense of superficialities.
- Establish better discipline, using moderate corporal punishment, closed-off rooms with less distractions and not automatically placing a teacher in the defensive in disciplinary cases.
- Include "absolute" grading on report cards.
- Reaffirm that teachers are indirectly paid by parents (taxpayers), are not guaranteed a job and are not to propagandize against religious, political and moral values of parents.

In closing, may I say that the solution does not lie in spending more money, but rather in achieving a more sound operational policy.

Stickers anger her

We are from out of state and cannot find an explanation for the purchase of a vehicle sticker in Illinois. Granted, other states charge a fee for an automobile sticker, but in return car owners receive a car inspection. This tells the owner just how safe his car is and what repairs are needed.

Perhaps one of your readers can tell us just what we are getting in return for the sticker fee. I can't believe it is for better roads, since the high tolls charged on the roads should be more than enough to cover all costs.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Local communities, not the State of Illinois, issue vehicle stickers.

He blasts board members

I was deeply sorry to read the remarks credited to Schaumburg Township Dist. 54 board members Edward Bedard and Gordon Thoren in an article in The Herald for Feb. 17.

As citizens, teachers have the right to participate fully in the political process. As teachers, I believe, they have a responsibility to provide an example of citizenship not only for their students but for the community they serve. Thus our teachers' involvement in various elections is a demonstration of our commitment to a set of goals long cherished by Americans.

From my point of view, the more serious problem posed by the charges is the possibility that the schools might become another battleground of narrow political partisanship. Surely you are aware of the extent to which "politics as usual" has contributed to the subversion of education in many of our urban centers.

Instead of deliberating lengthily over "who is going to control the schools," I propose we recommit ourselves to providing the good people of this community with the high quality educational system which they have so far supported and which they continue to deserve.

Annexation ripped

I would hereby like to object to the annexation petition of the Palatine Park subdivision into the Village of Palatine on the grounds that many of the people who signed the petitions did so, not of a free choice, but were coerced into it out of frustration, knowing that if the annexation did not go through this time, it would not be long before the village board would again see fit to outrageously raise our water rates until they got what they wanted.

I can understand why, politically, the village board wants to obtain as much of the unincorporated land into Palatine proper as possible — it's your methods I object to. The end does not justify the means. A total of 66 families now face the burden of solely paying for a village well.

If the board considers this a victory, enjoy it while you can; for I cannot believe that, come election time, the people of Palatine will choose to have their village run in this manner.

Escaping Chicago's mires

Mrs. Maud D. Pfeffer, member of the Ell Skinner Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, receives $5 for this week's Backward Glance.

In 1837, Roswell Brown, his wife Minerva, and their 15-year-old daughter, Caroline, painstakingly made their way by covered wagon through what is now Chicago, but at that time was known as Fort Sheridan.

The area was a real mud hole, miry and slippery. Thick slabs of mud stuck to the wagon wheels until they became so encrusted it was difficult to move. Again and again, Roswell Brown would be forced to jump down and scrape off the accumulation. At times the family even walked to save the strain on the horses.

During one of these mud-scraping stops, Brown exclaimed, "I wouldn't live here if they gave me land as far as I can see!"

He meant it. They continued north to homestead in Cottage Grove Township in Dane County, Wis. Their own experiences fresh in their mind, they build an added room on the house so other weary travelers might stop for a few days' rest from the tossing, jarring ride over rough ground.

CAROLINE BROWN, the daughter, was my great-grandmother. She became one of the first schoolteachers in Wisconsin. In those days, being the teacher meant being the janitor as well. In cold weather, she arrived long before the students to build the fire. Another of her duties was to sweep out the school. This she did with a broom made of twigs.

Caroline became acquainted with Governor Peck and his family, who lived in Madison, the state capital. Peck's daughter was the first white child born in Madison, and with much ceremony, was named Wisconsin Victoria Peck.

The first boy born in Madison was named — simply and fittingly — Madison.

Readers, take a backward glance at your family history for some interesting incident that ties in with American history. Send it to Eleanor Rives, Paddock Publications, 601 W. Golf Rd., Mount Prospect, Ill. 60056. Include name, address and phone. There is a $5 award for each story printed.

Teen serious on getting elected

cuss his candidacy. I asked why he is running against Robert Dix, a certified public accountant.

"I'd RATHER DO it than sit around and say why I didn't," Paul answered.

Paul said that candidates ought to be qualified for office and familiar with not just where the library was built, but also what happens inside.

He has worked two years as a library page. That means Paul does everything from shelving books to file cards and tell people to keep their mouths shut.

"It's a good job," Paul said. "You can learn every aspect of the library."

Most of his ideas are sound. Paul talked about a lack of communication between library staff members and the people who are Palatine's library board.

HE SAID THAT staff members approach the board in a very "aprehensive" manner. They are sometimes unsure about making suggestions.

Paul said you hardly ever see board members in the library. He wondered how can they possibly know what's going on? How can they possibly understand the patrons' needs if they don't even come and ask?

Paul said he would work to institute an "Amnesty Day" on which people could return books and not pay fines. He thinks people get scared and wonder if paying the fine won't also mean selling the house.

AND PAUL SAID he would emphasize the special needs of older citizens and handicapped persons. He said not enough is being done for those two groups.

Paul talked about developing the library into more than just a place to house books, magazines and records. He alluded to a complete "cultural center" featuring more programs under joint sponsorship with the Palatine Park District.

"The library should function as a total community center," Paul insisted.

He also thinks the library building sometimes looks sloppy because the board has not authorized the purchase of book bins to be placed along the aisles.

THESE ARE NOT the ideas of a heretic, or someone who would come in and overthrow the library board.

Still, there's the problem of selling himself. How many people will vote for any candidate who is 18 years old and fuzzy cheeked, although that never was any measure of a man's sincerity.

Will anyone take him seriously? "I think they will. I take myself seriously," Paul said. "I think I'm one of the best qualified candidates."

"I KNOW THE problems and I feel the people who work in the library should have a voice."

Paul is just now planning his campaign. He will contact groups such as "Friends of the Library." Also, Palatine residents might find Paul knocking at their doorsteps on weekends.

He'll introduce himself, talk about his candidacy and ask for suggestions. He'll also ask for votes.

Paul will be listed first on the ballot because he filed first. "That helps," Paul agreed.

The Accepted Influence in the Northwest Suburbs

Financial support lagging, NSSEO cuts 8

Eight staff members have been trimmed from the 1976-77 payroll of the Northwest Suburban Special Education Organization because of the doubtful future of the organization's Center for Child and Family Services.

Edward McDonald, NSSEO director, said the staff cuts were made "due to the inability of the member (school) districts to support the center."

The Center for Child and Family Services, 112 N. Belmont Ave., Arlington Heights, provides psychiatric, psychological and educational services for children who have learning, emotional or social problems. It presently has 10 staff members.

NSSEO IS A SPECIAL education cooperative supported by 10 Northwest suburban school districts. The center, although an NSSEO program, is used by only five of the member districts that pay a fee for each student they send to the center.

"Because of the extreme financial condition of some of the member districts, we have been notified unofficially that there will be a reduction of children" at the center next year,

Inflation, salaries to increase NSSEO's spending by 7.6%

Inflation and higher salaries will increase spending 7.44 per cent in 1976-77 in the Northwest Suburban Special Education Organization.

Total operating expenses for the special education cooperative, supported by 10 Northwest suburban school districts, is budgeted for $3,140,908 next year compared to $2,923,135 this year.

The NSSEO governing board approved the budget last week, and it will now be sent to the member districts for approval. Approval by a majority of the districts is required for the budget to become effective.

A STATEMENT FROM the finance committee said the budget represents the "minimum financial allocations necessary for the development of quality education for the handicapped." Expenditures were carefully screened because of the "current financial crisis" of the member districts resulting from Gov. Daniel Walker's cutbacks in regular and special education program funding and other factors such as "declining enrollments and static assessed valuations," the statement said.

Estimated payments for each member district are Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15, $453,556; Wheeling-Prospect Heights Dist. 21, $242,356; Prospect Heights Dist. 23, $38,476; Arlington Heights Dist. 25, $401,525; River Trails Dist. 26, $72,311; Schaumburg Township Dist. 54, $215,444; Mount Prospect Dist. 57, $146,855; Elk Grove Township Dist. 59, $315,506; High School Dist. 211, $155,684; and High School Dist. 214, $350,366.

The budget includes an 8 per cent salary increase for all NSSEO personnel. Negotiations between the NSSEO teachers' union and the board have not yet begun for 1976-77, but board officials said if teachers receive more than an 8 per cent raise, member districts will have to be asked to approve higher payments.

Other budget increases reflect higher rates for utilities, insurance, and maintenance services.

NSSEO oversees the education of deaf, blind, and physically, emotionally and mentally handicapped children in the area.

U. S. Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., was born March 8, 1841.

On this day in history:

- In 1894, New York became the first state to pass a law requiring dogs to be licensed.
- In 1917, strikes and riots in St. Petersburg marked the start of the Russian Bolshevik Revolution.
- In 1961, the U. S. nuclear submarine Patrick Henry arrived in Holy Loch, Scotland, from Charleston, S.C., the first American sub to use the Scottish naval base.

- In 1962, the U. S. House of Representatives defeated a bill that would have increased its membership from 435 to 438.

A thought for the day: Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "Taxes are what we pay for civilian society."

MAKE PADDOCK PUBLICATIONS PART OF YOUR DAILY LIFE

MOTHER OF THREE with a fourth child on the way, Lana Cooper has done little campaigning for her husband, Richard, seeking the Republican nomination for governor of Illinois. But she says she's behind him 100 per cent in his race for head of state. The March 16 primary will decide whether there's any campaigning in her future.

The woman behind the man

Lana Cooper shies from limelight

(The woman behind the man running for public office or already occupying it faces special problems. She must be a public person to some extent whether she likes it or not, and she must sustain their private life often in trying circumstances. Always she must accept that her mate will be criticized. Today The Herald begins a four-part series on the women in the lives of the four men seeking nomination for governor of Illinois.)

by KAREN BLECHA

Lana Cooper is a very private person. The first impression one gets is that she doesn't like to be interviewed. The second is that she really doesn't look forward to the possibility of becoming a governor's wife. In a time when the popular image of a candidate's wife is Betty Ford, Lana Cooper is more like Pat Nixon.

Mrs. Cooper hasn't done much campaigning for her husband, Richard, the self-made multi-millionaire founder of Weight Watchers of Chicago, Inc., who is seeking the Republican nomination for governor of Illinois. While he has worked his way around the state ("I'm a worker, not a walker") as a college newspaper reporter, miner and corn picker, she has preferred to stay at home with the family.

"I have three small children under the age of five and am expecting a fourth," she said, sitting in her den, a favorite room in black and purple with an Oriental touch. The Cooper house, on a private secluded drive in Winnetka, is a composite of modern furniture with emphasis on chrome and glass. Knock on the door and a maid answers.

"I don't like the limelight. I don't like to be on public display," said the red-haired, perfectly groomed 33-year-old candidate's wife who has never had to struggle with the rules of Weight Watchers. "It bothers me to get up in front of a group and speak. Whenever I was elected to an office at school, I would shiver and shake if I had to get up before a large group."

LANA COOPER IS a woman with no special hobbies, campaigns or crusades. She doesn't have any special plans if she becomes the governor's wife although she said she is interested in education.

"I like to see everyone have a good education — that's where it all begins," she said. "I'm ready and available to be at the beck and call of the job of governor's wife. Running is important to Richard so it's important to me. I'll go wherever he goes."

If that sounds like the philosophy of the Total Woman, it isn't. Mrs. Cooper said her husband treats her as an equal, which is the way she wants it although like her husband, she is opposed to the Equal Rights Amendment.

"It's the legislation I don't like," she said. "I am certainly for equality for women. But I would not like to see my daughter or myself, if we had another war, serve in the military."

Mrs. Cooper said she was 100 per cent behind her husband's decision to run for head of state. "I didn't know what I was getting myself into then," she said, laughing. "I have found it a very interesting, rewarding and educational experience. I had a completely different view of politics and I was a little naive about it. I am no longer naive or believe everything I read in the newspapers."

THE CANDIDATE'S wife seems particularly bitter about the treatment her husband has received in the newspapers. "I would have liked to see him get better press," she said. "I have been at several functions where the candidates spoke and I felt that a lot of times the press doesn't tell it like it really is." She didn't elaborate.

Cooper has said that his wife's first reaction to his running for office was fear and Mrs. Cooper admitted she worries about the hazards of being in the public eye. Especially since Sec. of State Michael Howlett, a Democratic candidate for governor, had to move his family into hiding recently because of alleged threats.

"I'm conscious of the danger — I don't like my address or the kids' names put in the paper," Mrs. Cooper said. "We haven't had many problems, except in the beginning of the campaign when I got two or three crank calls."

The only other hardship of the campaign, she said, is her husband being away from home so much. "I'd like him to be home more with the kids — we're expecting another baby and that's hard."

Mrs. Cooper met her husband the day she graduated from Finch College in New York City, the alma mater of Tricia Nixon Cox. "I met him in his real estate office when a girlfriend and I were looking for an apartment," she explained. "She said she had a friend who could help us. Richard was that friend." They were married in February, 1966.

THE STORY THAT has been put out by Cooper's publicists includes a tale about the candidate hocking his wife's engagement ring for $1,500 to get the money to buy the Weight Watchers franchise. His wife says it really didn't happen that way.

"Don't believe everything you read," she said but refused to tell the story, saying that it was too long and "not really pertinent" to the campaign.

Mrs. Cooper said she hasn't thought much about making the move to the governor's mansion in Springfield and that the campaign hasn't had much effect on the Cooper children. "The kids are very blasé. They'd much rather see Superman on the other station if Daddy's on TV," she said.

She added that she thinks her husband would be a good change for the state. "I think he's a brilliant businessman and that's what the state needs now," she said. "Most of our friends think he's crazy. But most are all for him although they are content with their lives."

While Mrs. Cooper doesn't like any publicity about her family, she does believe that having a family is an asset to her husband's campaign.

"PEOPLE LIKE TO see a man with children and feel he can much better relate to the problems of families. He knows the problems of raising children, which is a lot different from the problems when you're single and living by yourself," she said, taking an obvious dig at her husband's opponent in the March 16 primary, bachelor James Thompson.

Mrs. Cooper believes that her husband will continue working for the Republican party, even if he loses the election. "I don't think he's through with politics," she said. "Me, I take each day one at a time."

Trust-buster needles 7th Avenue

by ELLIE GROSSMAN

Up and down Seventh Avenue they go, pacing nervously. The women's apparel makers are worried, you see, about Laura Worsinger.

The confident, blond lawyer, 28, is chief of a special anti-trust task force in the New York regional office of the Federal Trade Commission.

She and her 10-man staff currently are investigating possible pricing violations in the ladies' outerwear industry, which basically can be reduced to this: perhaps that simple, polyester dress you just paid $50 for really should have cost less.

It's a complicated affair, Worsinger explained. In the 1930s, Congress passed the Miller-Tydings Act which permitted any state which chose to pass a "fair trade" law.

THIS, SHE SAID, allowed "manufacturers in certain industries to engage in resale price maintenance, provided they followed certain rules." Approximately two-thirds of the states did pass fair trade laws, but it's important to note that, with only a few exceptions, women's apparel was not fair traded.

"The FTC believes very strongly," she explained, "that the fair trade laws produced artificial inflation of prices and that their repeal should mean far more competition in the marketplace." In other words, lower prices.

Congress agreed. In December,

1975, it repealed the Miller-Tydings Act, setting March 11, 1976, as the cut-off date for the existence of all state fair trade laws.

But a year and a half ago, many states voluntarily began repealing their fair trade laws, hoping to energize the nation's slumping economy.

"AFTER THE repeal of fair trade laws in New York," Worsinger said, "we got a number of letters from people who wanted to know why apparel prices weren't going down. Remember, women's apparel, with a few exceptions, had never been fair traded, so that if mandatory pricing existed in ladies garments when fair trade was still permitted, that was illegal nevertheless."

Last summer, when Worsinger and her staff began to look into "various industries for pricing violations, women's apparel came to our attention," she says "because surveys showed there wasn't sufficient deviation in prices. That warranted further investigation."

So they began talking to people in the industry. Salesmen led them to buyers who led them to manufacturers who led them to retailers. They began hearing from industry people voluntarily and finally, she said, "we put it all together and recommended to the FTC in Washington that a formal, nationwide investigation of the women's outerwear industry be commenced."

THE FTC SAID, go ahead. On Dec. 22, it granted the New York regional office power to issue subpoenas and, so far Worsinger's office has issued "more than 38, with more to come." In the next few weeks, the task force will begin holding private hearings.

What those called will testify about falls into three categories which crisscross each other. First, whether manufacturers are illegally maintaining prices by not allowing retailers to deviate from suggested retail prices.

"If the manufacturer's suggested retail price is understood to be mandatory — and this can be established by just a wink of the eye — that results in restraint of trade and is illegal. Also, it's possible for a manufacturer not to suggest a retail price but to have one understood," she said, "because of a tacit understanding in the industry that the retailer always doubles the wholesale price of the garment."

SECONDLY, are retailers, "to maximize their profits," pressuring manufacturers to sell at high prices to preclude competition?

And, lastly, have retailers boycotted or threatened to boycott manufacturers who don't maintain prices or who sell to discounters?

Well, when the smoke clears, does Worsinger think the consumer will pay less for that $50 dress? She smiled. "There's no proof these violations exist," she said, "but if they do and if we can eliminate them, I think retailers will start competing with each other on the basis of price and that means consumers will pay less."

Worsinger's boss calls her "one of the most outstanding anti-trust lawyers in the country," and a hand drawn sign in her office reads, "Bust a Trust Today."

No wonder Seventh Avenue is pacing.

Probe really hurts

by ELLIE GROSSMAN

The vice president of merchandising for a large intimate apparel firm was chatting pleasantly the other day until he was asked his opinion of the Federal Trade Commission's probe into possible pricing violations of ladies outerwear.

"It's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of," he boomed. "Of all the industries in the country, women's apparel is the most competitive. Why doesn't the FTC go after the oil industry or the automotive industry instead?"

His bailiwick, intimate apparel, isn't even being investigated at this point, but his reaction reflects the resentment of many ladies garment manufacturers who are shifting uncomfortably under the FTC's spotlight.

A sampling of opinion in the industry also disclosed confusion, fear and reluctance to talk. (In two cases, receptionists refused even to reveal the names of their companies' presidents.)

"I'm not discussing it," said Eli Roussio, president of Russ Togs, one of the large companies subpoenaed by the FTC's special anti-trust task force. "I'm represented by counsel and anything you want you can get from my attorney."

Bud Johns, corporate communications director of Levi Strauss in San Francisco, said: "So far, we haven't been subpoenaed, so to the best of our knowledge, we're not involved. We don't pre-ticket our womenswear suggesting a retail price, and we don't sell to discounters." Possible mandatory retail pricing and possible boycotting of manufacturers who sell to discounters are two areas under investigation by the FTC.

TWENTY MINUTES later, Johns called to add this: "While we don't mark any prices on tickets, our sales bulletins do list suggested prices. But," he added, "we don't maintain them."

John Johnson, vice president and secretary of Warnerco, Inc., in Bridgeport, Conn., which owns White Stag sportswear, High Tide swimwear, Rosanna sweaters and Jerry Silverman designer clothes, said:

"As far as I know, we have not been subpoenaed. But it's my own feeling that the FTC and the country would be better served if they used their resources elsewhere."

Sex hormones can affect personality

I would like to know if a hormone imbalance can cause emotional disturbances in a woman under 30 years of age. I know this can occur during the menopause and patients are given hormone pills. If this is true, how could I go about finding out if a hormone imbalance exists. Can you tell by a Pap smear? Please let me know because I believe I have a hormone imbalance.

Your glands may affect your personality and your personality may affect your glands. That statement is not limited to sex hormones, but they certainly are included in it.

I have seen patients with psychotic episodes associated with an overactive thyroid. At the other end of the spectrum we have a condition called myxedema madness which refers to the personality changes or dementia that can occur in individuals with severe advanced low thyroid function.

Similarly one can see patients with psychoses which may be temporary in association with taking cortisone and other adrenal cortex hormones.

Sex hormones can affect one's behavior. Male hormone tends to make men more aggressive. Estrogen tends to increase a woman's femininity and receptiveness although this response is more noted in animals below the level of the human.

Emotional disturbances often occur at the menopause time, but whether they are specifically related to a hormone imbalance or is often open to question. There are many other factors going on at this phase of life. Such emotional disturbances are frequently not helped by the administration of female sex hormones.

The problem is complicated by the inadvisable practice of giving female hormones to women with emotional disturbances which are not really related to the menopause at all. Many menopausal symptoms overlap the kind of symptoms associated with anxiety and depression problems. The clinician must be alert to separate the two conditions and treat the one that is really giving the difficulty.

WOMEN CAN HAVE a very early premature menopause. There are cases on record younger than 30 years of age. One can tell if there is a deficiency of female hormone by special stains done on cells obtained with the Pap smear. One can also get some idea of a hormone deficiency by testing the urine and blood.

Since you have raised this question, I am sure you will not be satisfied until it is answered. The solution then is to go see your obstetrics and gynecology specialist and tell him what you really want to know. He can do or have the proper tests done. However, I think that if he tells you that your hormone balance is quite normal, the next step is to see about getting some help for what you have labeled as an emotional disturbance and that does not mean hormone therapy.

For more information about endocrines and their effect on personality at the menopause send 50 cents for The Health Letter, Number 5-12, Menopause. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing. Address your letter to me in care of Paddock Publications, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Is there an answer to slippery sheets?

Dear Dorothy: My very dear husband wanted to give me something special for Christmas and bought me satin sheets. The bottom sheet seems okay, but the top one is so slippery the blanket and spread slip off the bed. Also, the pillows seem to want to land on the floor. Is there any treatment that would keep them from sliding so much? — Marie Harvey

Is there any of us who hasn't at some time or another thought of having satin sheets? Yet the practical side of it is that satin is purely a luxury item, and I still haven't found anyone in the trade who knows what can be done about the slipping. I have a pillow with a satin side — the other side is percale, so that it doesn't slip. Maybe somebody knows something we don't. Any volunteers?

Dear Dorothy: Children threw eggs on our cement porch floor. I've tried many things to remove the stains, but with no luck. Can you recommend anything? — Mrs. J. DiKorezo

Unfortunately, all the usual methods for cleaning rarely work on concrete. One that might work on a protein (which is what eggs are) stain is an enzyme presoak solution. Let it stay for an hour or more. If you see it working, scrub well, then rinse.

Dear Dorothy: Thought you might like my way of making homemade mocha coffee which we call American Mocha. Mix together one cup of instant Swiss-style cocoa, one cup of instant coffee, one cup of sugar and one and one-half cups of coffee lightener. Just keep the mixture on hand. To make the drink use two to four teaspoons per cup according to taste — and fill the cup with boiling water. We like it. Maybe you will, too. — Sue Robare

(Mrs. Ritz welcomes questions and hints. If a personal reply is required, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Write to her in care of Suburban Living, Paddock Publications, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60005.)

Ask Andy

Raisins taste yummy, good for you

Andy sends an award to Kriese Olson, 14, of Grand Portage, Minn., for her question:

HOW ARE RAISINS MADE?

At one time in history, raisins were a very expensive food, and only the wealthy could afford to eat them. In Rome, during the time of Emperor Nero, raisins were a standard item on the menu at feasts and other gala occasions. Now, we can enjoy raisins most any time we want to. Though only a wrinkled grape in appearance, they are as good for us as they taste.

A raisin is a sun-dried grape. Not just any old grape, but generally one of three varieties. The two most common types of grapes used are the Thompson seedless and the muscat. The Black Corinth grapes, commonly known as currants, are widely used in bakery treats.

Grapevines are all pretty much alike, and raisin grapes are grown in the same way as grapes for other purposes, although they are harvested at different times. The grapes for raisins may be left on the vines to dry if there is sufficient sunshine and heat. Since this is chancy, they are usually harvested as soon as possible after they ripen.

The large clusters of ripened grapes are placed on trays of wood or paper to dry in the sun. After 10 to 15 days the dried grapes are packed in boxes and sent to a packing plant where special machines clean them. Other machines remove the seeds, if necessary, and the stems. The cleaned raisins are then pressed into sealed packages and reached for their journey to the grocery store.

It takes about four tons of fresh grapes to produce one ton of raisins. Most of the weight loss is in moisture. But when they reach you they are still loaded with nutritional value. They are rich in iron, phosphorus, calcium and copper. The natural sugars in raisins give the body a quick energy boost because they are absorbed immediately. Vitamins A and G are also found in raisins, along with some of the B vitamins.

California leads the United States in the production of raisins. Most of California's raisin crop is sun-dried and unbleached, keeping their natural color of black or dark brown. A small percentage of raisins, however, is artificially bleached and dried to a golden color.

Andy sends an award to Kimberly Ann Drews, 9, of San Diego, Calif., for her question:

WHAT ARE BONES MADE OF?

The human skeleton is a complex structure. It contains long bones, tiny bones and everything in between. A newborn baby's bones are formed of a tough rubbery substance called cartilage. This gradually changes into bone. Bone is composed mostly of the minerals calcium and phosphorus. Water is a necessary component as is an organic substance called collagen. The composition of bone varies with age, but foods rich in calcium and phosphorus, such as milk and cheese, are good menu items for all of us throughout our lives.

The mature human body contains 206 bones, ranging in size from the long, powerful thigh bone, or femur, to the tiniest bone, the pisiform, which lies at the base of the little finger. Miraculously suited to the job of protecting the vital organs within the body, bones mend solidly when a fracture occurs, which is common. Although the mending process is somewhat long, especially when compared to the rapid healing power of skin, it is often so complete that eventually even an X-ray cannot detect the fracture site.

Do you have a question to Ask Andy? Send it on a post card with your name, age and address to Ask Andy in care of The Herald, P.O. Box 680, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60004. Entries open to girls and boys 7 to 17.

Greed, 'tis a horrible thing

Jim: "If you don't like the bidding of today's hand, you can't get into an argument with me. I didn't bid it and I don't like it."

Oswald: "How about the play?"

Jim: "It was quite interesting. See if you can figure out how South got greedy and managed to go down at four hearts against a deuce of clubs opening?"

Win at bridge

by Oswald and Jim Jacoby

Oswald: "Let's see. He won the club with his queen and cashed the three top trumps. After that start he could run off dummy's clubs in order to discard his spades and make five odd. I suppose he tried for six."

Jim: "He sure did. After cashing the three top trumps, he took an immediate diamond finesse. It worked because good old East didn't take his king. Then South cashed the clubs while East chucked a spade. He ruffed a spade, led a diamond, finessed again and watched the defense take the rest of the tricks since East produced the king, pulled the last trump and led a spade."

Hersey takes second in state gym finals

by CHARLIE DICKINSON
Gymnastics Editor

Neil Krupicka saw it coming but for Don Von Ebers the post-state gymnastics meet shower was a complete surprise.

"How am I going to get home without catching pneumonia," the soaked Hersey head coach asked.

"We brought extra clothes," Krupicka said after his Hinsdale Central Red Devils had won their sixth state gymnastics title in seven years.

Von Ebers was treated to a rinse by his team after Hersey overtook Oak Park-River Forest to take second in the meet.

"It was worth it," Von Ebers said while he towed off, "these kids came out of nowhere."

The Huskies' performance was amazing. Runnerup in the Mid-Suburban League, Von Ebers pumped his team up to win district and sectional titles with an injured all-arounder and capped a season that many people felt would be a bad one by Hersey standards by placing as the second best team in the state.

For Hinsdale, it was a matter of routine. Or routines, to be precise. Nearly perfect routines from the three gymnasts who moved through the preliminaries Friday to the finals Saturday.

"Nobody can hit under pressure like our kids," Krupicka said.

Breck Grigas, who missed winning the state all-around title by .01 Friday, had the most pressure on him as he competed in four events Saturday.

He handled himself well, hitting 8.45 in free ex, 8.40 on side horse, 8.65 on P-Bars and 9.00 on the still rings.

Combined with Dave Stoldt's 8.65 on side horse and Peter Velguth's state championship 9.15 on rings, the Devils finished right where Krupicka figured they would.

"We ended up right where we thought we would when the meet began tonight," Krupicka said after Hinsdale had outpointed Hersey 150.71 to 147.78. "We walked away with it and proved we were a much better team."

"But it should have ended Friday night," Krupicka continued. "They should have finished up the team scoring last night and let the individuals come back tonight."

"There's too much pressure on a kid when he represents himself and his school. I think they just wanted to get a full house, which they did, but I hope they change it next year."

The new team competition format involved subtracting the scores of the final qualifiers from the Friday night score and replacing them with what they hit on Saturday.

Under that system Addison Trail led the field going into the finals with 131.82 but had just one competitor eligible Saturday night. Addison finished sixth with 140.32 when Bob Powers scored an 8.50.

Hersey had five spots in the final field and made excellent use of all of them.

"Every kid toed the mark and got the same score or better," Von Ebers said. "And we had a greater chance of missing."

Danny Muenz did not miss. The senior all-arounder, who injured his ribs late in the season, made the finals on four events and took medals in three of them.

Muenz threw his best routine of the night on high bar. His 8.90 score finished second and led the field until Rolling Meadows' Keith Liszewski came on to win the state championship with a 9.00.

The Huskies' only other state finalist was P-Bars specialist Rich Stange. Stange closed out his career at Hersey with an 8.30.

Besides Liszewski's title winning performance on high bar there were two other individual crowns taken by Mid-Suburban League gymnasts.

Prospect's Jim Tangney completed his senior season in fine style as he tied with Maine South's Craig Martin, who had won the state all-around title the night before, for the P-Bars championship with an 8.75.

Tim Connelly of Elk Grove, who teamed with Gene Christensen and Tom Balla to lead the Gens to a fourth place finish, won the side horse title with a 9.10.

Elk Grove coach Fred Gaines had said Connelly was "too pretty" not to win the state championship and he was right.

"Tim looked super," Gaines said. Then remarking on his teams' finish said, "It's too bad (we didn't win a trophy) but we ended up pretty well despite everything that has happened this year."

Christensen, who took a fourth in the all-around with an 8.10 average, won medals on free ex (8.60) and high bar (8.60) and scored 8.35 on P-Bars and 8.60 on rings.

Balla, like Christensen a senior, hit 8.45 on his last high school routine.

The trampoline title belonged to Hinsdale South's Kevin Castens. With New Trier East's Brian Avery leading from the opening routine with an 8.85 Castens, the final competitor on the event, scored a 9.05 to back up a 9.10, the best sectional score in the state.

Glenn Johnson of Rolling Meadows, only a sophomore, will have another shot at the state meet as he threw a 7.80.

Johnson will be one of the top trampolinists in the state next year as only two other tramp finalists won't be graduating.

Four of the five medalists on the high bar were from the MSL. Prospect's Doug Zahour closed his senior season with an 8.55 mark, taking fifth place.

Rolling Meadows' Mark Wacławski hit an 8.25 on his final routine for the Mustangs.

Fremd's Doug Smidl will be back next season but the Fremd junior turned in an 8.40 on the side horse Saturday, tying him for a fifth place medal.

Buffalo Grove had two competitors in the final and one, Dewey Deal, will return next year. Deal, who is a sophomore, finished out of the top 10 in the all-around but won a fifth place medal on P-Bars at 8.50.

Senior Mark Farrington's final still rings routine for the Bison was judged at 8.45.

Paul Fisher's still rings routine, which earned a second at 9.10, drew the only boos of the night. The Niles West musclemen was edged by Hinsdale's Velguth for the state title, but fired the crowd with his inverted cross and overall style.

Tom Staley of Arlington and Dale Brungraber of Wheeling both shot 8.70s on the rings to tie for the fourth place medal.

MUSTANG MEDALIST. Keith Liszewski of Rolling Meadows, the state high bar champion with a 9.00 Saturday at Prospect, receives the coveted medal for his superb performance.

Tourney bid for DePaul; Demons to play Virginia

MISSION, Kan. (UPI) — DePaul, considered the darkhorse in the race for the final berth in the NCAA's 32-team Basketball Tournament, Sunday was named by the tourney's selection committee to an at-large berth in the East Regional at Charlotte, N.C., and Memphis State was chosen instead of 17th-ranked Louisville as the Metro Six Conference's second team.

DePaul was in consideration for the final berth along with Big Eight runnerup Kansas State and Western Athletic Conference runnerup Utah. When the committee announced the three teams had shots at the berth they had indicated Utah was the top choice with Kansas State second and that DePaul, which had already finished its season with a 19-8 mark, was a stopgap selection.

Utah, however, lost its Friday night game at home to Wyoming, which had won only one other WAC game this season. The Utes, who finished with a win over Colorado State Saturday, wound up 19-9, but lost four of their last seven games and three of the losses came at home.

NCAA pairings in scoreboard

Kansas State, meanwhile, finished the season with an 82-78 win at Oklahoma State in overtime, but the selection committee was apparently unimpressed with the way the Wildcats had to struggle for the victory. Kansas State, which had earned a berth last year as the second team from the Big Eight, finished 20-7 with eight wins in its last nine games.

Another factor which may have worked in DePaul's favor was that the selection committee originally extended invitations to only four independents — second-ranked Marquette, fifth-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas, No. 10 Notre Dame and unranked Virginia Tech — to fill the 11 at-large berths in the field.

The Blue Demons, guided by Ray Meyer, college basketball's winningest active coach with 528 victories in 830 games, compiled a 19-8 record in regular season play against one of the toughest schedules in the country. That schedule also was one of the determining factors in giving the nod to

Ray Meyer

Dave Corzine

DePaul over Kansas State and Utah.

Two Heralds area products — Dave Corzine and Andy Pancratz of Hersey High School — play prominent roles on the DePaul squad, and only one area player — George Pomey from Prospect and the University of Michigan — had previously participated in an NCAA tourney. Pomey was a starter on the 1965 Michigan team that fell to UCLA 91-80 in the title game.

DePaul's Meyer and his wife both live in Arlington Heights.

DePaul will open the regionals against Atlantic Coast Conference Champion Virginia, which upset three nationally ranked teams to win the ACC tournament during the weekend. The selection of DePaul means Virginia Tech will compete in the Midwest Regional and will open at South Bend, Ind., next Saturday against Mid-American Conference champion Western Michigan.

Tech had been used as a swing team. If Kansas State had been selected, it would have gone to the East Regionals and played Virginia.

Biggest surprise, of course, has to be the gutsy, underdog Virginia Cavaliers who did the impossible — beat third-ranked North Carolina in the finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference. The Cavaliers, which had to upset nationally ranked N.C. State and Maryland to reach the finals, used a pair of tie-breaking free throws by Billy Langlois and a game-clinching basket by freshman Otis Fulton to shock the mighty Tar Heels (25-3) which won the regular season ACC title.

Virginia finished sixth in the regular season and will now take its 18-11 mark to the Eastern regionals as the ACC champ, which UNC gets slumped to the Midwest regional. Wally Walker scored 25 points for the Cavaliers, who won their first ACC tourney in their 23-year history.

"I felt before the tourney that it would happen," said elated Virginia coach Terry Holland. "It's like a dream come true. We had to walk a fine line between being aware what's going on on the court and choking."

The Metro Six champion — Cincinnati — received an automatic qualifier's berth and the selection committee had invited a second team from the league, but specified it would be either 18th-ranked Cincinnati or Louisville, regardless of the outcome of the league's tournament this weekend.

However, Commissioner Larry Albus, a member of the selection committee, asked the NCAA to reconsider in light of Memphis State's decisive 97-76 win over Louisville in the semi-finals Friday. Cincinnati beat Memphis State 103-95 in the finals on Saturday.

Louisville, reportedly, was not upset with the NCAA's change of mind as it hoped for a bid to the National Invitational Tournament along with archrival Kentucky, which finished third in the Southeastern Conference.

Memphis State will face West Coast Athletic Association Champion Pepperdine in the opening round of the West Regional at Tempe, Ariz., Saturday.

They flopped...and flopped again

by ART MUGALIAN
Track and Field Editor

After the marathon jump-off staged by Maine West high jumpers Mike Klebe and Steve Myers at the Evanson Relays Friday night, the only jumping either one of them will be doing for a while is off a tall building.

The two towering Warrior floppers (Myers is 6-8 and Klebe a shade under 6-7) squared off in a friendly, two-hour dual for first place, and before it was over they had surpassed the Maine West indoor record, both clearing an official 6-6.

The old mark of 6-5 fell early in the proceedings as Klebe and Myers made 6-6 on their third tries. After missing at the next height, the two Warriors were prepared to settle for a tie.

But the real excitement was yet to come.

"I was eating a peanut butter sandwich when they told me I had to start jumping again," said Klebe, a senior who missed most of last year with a broken leg.

And when it was over, Klebe had jumped a total of 20 times before he had finally broken the tie by clearing at 6-4 while Myers missed.

First, they brought the bar down to 6-4, which both made. Back up to 6-6, and they both missed. Eventually, after barely less than two hours of high jumping, Klebe was awarded first place.

"Myers told me when it was over that he wouldn't have been able to jump over a line on the track," said West track coach Ron Brown, who will let his jumpers "rest" until the Blue Demon Relays this Saturday.

Klebe and Myers led Maine West to an impressive second-place finish in the 15-team Relays, which was won by a powerful Evanston host. The Warriors took four firsts, including Klebe's high jump. Scot Unger's .0545 victory against a strong 50-yard dash field, and Brian Toland's season-best in the mile, 4:28.5.

"Klebe looked the best at 6-6," Steve Klebe the best crack at 6-6," Brown added, still delighted and slightly stunned by the performance.

"The way they squared off, it was like something from a storybook," said the coach. "They were trying to help each other out, but they both wanted to win, too. It's nice to have two guys like that battling it out."

"I had the flu all week and didn't get in for workouts," said Klebe, who won the conference indoor high jump last week with a 6-3 effort.

"I changed my approach for this meet," Klebe explained. "The difference is the total arc isn't so great now."

Klebe also placed fifth in the triple jump with a 41-3½ mark, quite a bit short of his first-place conference effort of 42-8 last week.

"Both of these guys are looking forward to getting outdoors," said Brown. "They're so big, they want to get out in the fresh air and open spaces."

Klebe, who went 6-4 as a soph, has his sites set high for the outdoor season — maybe 6-11, he says. And Brown won't discourage him. "East-cally, Klebe knows his event best."

Myers, the taller of the two jumpers, holds the CSL outdoor record of 6-5, which he set last year. If anything, his improvement is even more sensational than Klebe's, however — if such a thing is possible to gauge.

A second-place finisher with 6-2 behind Klebe last week, Myers' season-best up until then was just 6-0. Now he's competing in the rare air of 6-6 and better.

"We've got a 12-foot, 12 inch high jump crew," said Brown. "That's not too bad."

Brown's two-mile relay team isn't too shabby either. Toland joined Jeff Brydges, Greg Keller, and Don Murray in recording the state's best time in the renewed event with an 8:06.6, just ahead of Evanston's team. Brydges' split was 1:57.

Coach Brown saw state potential there, as well as in his high jumpers and his junior miler, Toland. And he was plenty pleased with Unger's performance in the 50. Unger won with teammate Tony Krainik second in .05.6.

JIM TANGNE, senior at Prospect finishes his high school career with this effort on the parallel bars, and he tied for the best score in the state Saturday in the Prospect fieldhouse.

Zarley ties Irwin; Citrus in overtime

Kermit Zarley sank two long birdie putts on the final two holes of regulation play Sunday to go into a sudden-death playoff with Hale Irwin in the Citrus Open, but approaching darkness ended the play-off after two holes and it will be continued Monday morning.

Irwin, winner at Los Angeles two weeks ago, appeared to have his second victory in three weeks sewed up when he took a one-stroke lead with a birdie on the 71st hole. But Zarley, making a comeback after a serious neck operation last October, sank a pressure-packed 12-foot putt on the final hole to catch up again.

Irwin had started the final round in second place, three strokes behind Zarley, but took a one-stroke lead on Sunday's front nine when he outscored Zarley 33-37.

Zarley regained the lead by ramming home three straight birdie putts at the start of the back nine and then matched Irwin stroke for stroke the rest of the way home.

J. C. Snead, second last Monday in the Tournament Players Championship, shot a 68 Sunday for a 15-under-par 273 that was three strokes off the leaders' pace but good enough for third place and $14,200.

John Mahaffey was next at 69-274 and Mike Hill, with a 70, and Larry Zeigler, with a 69, finished at 275.

Americans dominate speed skating

Sheila Young, a 25-year-old Olympic gold medalist from Detroit, won her third world spring speed skating championship since 1973 Sunday in the absence of the strong Russians who boycotted the competition in West Berlin for political reasons.

Leah Poulos of Northbrook, Ill., completed an American double by finishing second with 175,900 points, with Sylvia Burka of Canada pulling up to third at 177,305.

In Goteborg, Sweden it was a different story however. Soviet skaters dominated the world figure skating championships again this year by taking five out of a possible 12 first place finishes, but the United States showed its future is very bright by placing in the top five in every event.

With most of the placers expected to continue in the amateur ranks, it would mean that the United States will have a full team of three entries in every event at next year's championships in Tokyo.

Dorothy Hamill, 19, of Riverside, Conn., who won the Olympic gold last month, showed she was the best woman skater in the world with a solid performance in the free skating Saturday night.

In the men's event, John Curry of Great Britain added his world title to the Olympic gold medal while American David Santee of Park Ridge, Ill., surprised many with his fifth place finish, knocking American champion Terry Kubicka of Cypress, Calif., to sixth.

Arlington tabs 35 stake races

Arlington Park Sunday announced a schedule of 35 stake races during its 120 day 1976 season with a total purse of $1.54 million, including seven events expected to gross more than $100,000.

The highest purse on the program should come in the Arlington-Washington Futurity scheduled Sept. 25 at 6½ furlongs for 2-year-old colts and geldings, a $200,000 event.

Notre Dame's Dantley is top college cager

Adrian Dantley of Notre Dame, a 6-5 junior who finished fourth in the nation in scoring at 28.5 points per game and led the Fighting Irish into the NCAA playoffs, Sunday was named the college player-of-the-year by the United States Basketball Writers Association.

Dantley also was one of four underclassmen chosen on the US-BWA 10-man All-America squad.

Other underclassmen on the team were 6-11 juniors Richard Washington of UCLA and Kent Benson of Indiana and 6-8 sophomore Bernard King of Tennessee.

Seniors named to the team were John Lucas of Maryland, Scott May of Indiana, Earl Tatum of Marquette, Phil Sellers of Rutgers, Willie Smith of Missouri and Mitch Kupchak of North Carolina.

Naismith Award winner May and teammate Benson also headed the all conference team selected for UPI by the league coaches, the second straight time each has been honored.

Completing the Big Ten Team were league leading scorer, Terry Furlow from Michigan State, guard Rickey Green from Michigan, and Minnesota's Bahamian center, Mike Thompson.

Marcis captures Richmond 400

Dave Marcis of Skyland, N.C., nosed out second-place Richard Petty of Randleman, N.C., by less than five feet at the finish Sunday to win the Richmond 400 stock car race. Marcis powered his 1976 mercury to an average speed of 72.792 miles per hour on the .542-mile asphalt oval. Petty in his Dodge placed second, followed by Bobby Allison of Hugheytown, Ala., in a 1975 Mercury and Cale Yarborough of Timmonsville, S.C., in a Chevrolet.

Louisville, Kentucky gain berths in NIT

The National Invitation Tournament Sunday completed half its field by naming Louisville, Kentucky, Oregon, Providence, North Carolina A&T and Niagara to the nation's oldest post-season classic, which will be held at Madison Square Garden, March 13-21.

The remainder of the field will be named at 1:30 p.m. EST Monday, according to Peter A. Carlesimo, president of the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Basketball Association which sponsors the NIT.

Louisville (20-6) missed out on a chance to play in the NCAA tournament when it lost to Memphis State Friday night in the semifinals of the Metro Six tournament. The Cardinals, ranked 17th nationally, will be making their 11th appearance in the NIT. Louisville won the tournament in 1956.

Kentucky has not been to the NIT since 1960, the year before the point-shaving scandals broke out. When several Wildcat players were implicated in the scandal in 1961, Coach Adolph Rupp put part of the blame on the previous year's trip to New York and never again did a Rupp-coached team accept an invitation to play in Madison Square Garden.

Other leading candidates for bids are South Carolina, Maryland, North Texas State, Florida State, North Carolina State, Texas A&M, San Francisco, St. Peter's (NJ), St. Bonaventure and Kansas State.

Maryland, ranked eighth nationally, was upset in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament last weekend and was reportedly going to turn down a bid to the NIT. Coach Lefty Driesell, however, said he would put it to a vote of his players.

Fighter-actor Rosenbloom dies

Max E. "Slapsie Maxie" Rosenbloom, a former world light-heavyweight boxing champion who later enjoyed success as an actor and comedian, died Saturday at the age of 71.

Rosenbloom, who earned the nickname "Slapsie Maxie" for his soft punching style in the ring, had been in ill health for a number of years. He died in Braewood Sanitarium here.

He started his professional boxing career in 1923 and won the 15-round decision over Lou Scozza in Buffalo.

Bob Olin took the title from him Nov. 16, 1934, in New York. Of the 289 professional fights in his career, the boxer won 210 and was elected to the Boxing Hall of Fame in 1972.

Also a comedian, Rosenbloom operated a luxurious night club in Los Angeles during the post World War II years and another one in San Francisco. He played numerous small parts in movies and in 1961 portrayed Big Julie in "Guys and Dolls."

Lakers lead Bulls at halftime

Hoping to salvage the finale of their West Coast foray, the Chicago Bulls trailed the Los Angeles Lakers 43-39 at midgame Sunday night.

The hot outside shooting of Gail Goodrich helped the Lakers pull into a 26-18 first quarter lead but Chicago scrapped back in the second period, trimming the gap to a single point late in the going and then getting several opportunities to move on top.

With 12 seconds to go, however, Kareem Jabbar plunked in a free throw and then rebounded his own missed second try, feeding to Kermit Washington for a stuff underneath.

Millar records 22-plus long jump in first meet

by ART MUGALIAN
Track and Field Editor

Brad Millar's basketball season ended last Wednesday when the Prospect Knights lost their regional opener, 70-57. Millar, a 6-3 junior, scored 13.

His track season began Saturday at the Bloom Indoor Invitational. And Millar was ready.

The tall and versatile Knight jumper cranked up a 22-1½ effort in the long jump, one-half-inch better than the existing Mid-Suburban outdoor record and almost a foot farther than the indoor meet mark.

The alltime area record of 22-7½, set in 1950 by Arlington's Gordon Busse, is the oldest area record on the books.

"I only had two days of practice," Millar said Sunday. "I just got my steps down at the meet."

Incredibly, Millar's effort was only good enough for sixth place in a field that included state Class A champion Steve Safranski of Putnam County. The Prospect jumper also went 8-2 for fourth place in the high jump and failed to qualify for the finals in the triple jump with 41-2½.

"He's a little out of condition," said Millar's coach, Joe Wanner. "He jumped much better in the morning than he did at night."

"But for what he did, I think Brad showed that basketball doesn't hurt him," Wanner quipped.

Millar's six long jumps included three over 22 feet and only one — 20-8 — under 21-7.

"I was just trying to get a place — it took 22 feet just to get into the finals," said the Knight junior who reached 21-1 as a freshman.

Which is his best event? "I think it's the long jump," Brad said. "Then the high jump."

"Brad is so much bigger and stronger this year," Wanner noted. "But I think his (long jump) marks will come down a little after we start working out some more. He'll be out working and he'll get fatigued."

Wanner got a good effort from hurdler Jim Wright who was fourth in the 60-yard highs (:07.8) and fifth in the lows (:07.4).

Hersey's strong triple-jump duo of Dave Koelper and Tony Becker did alright for themselves at Bloom, too. Koelper reached 41-7½ and Becker hit 41-5. Huskie shotputter Matt Zakula reached a personal best when he tossed the 12-pounder 50-2½.

ROLLING MEADOWS Junior Rick Sutton finished a close fourth in the 60-yard dash finals at the Eastern Illinois University Invite at Charleston Saturday, clocking a :06.4, the same as the top three runners.

"To be fair, a phototimer should have been used," said Mustang coach Joe Vitton. "There was a lot of confusion down on the finish line and I think they just picked anybody they could."

But Sutton, who has a :05.5 in the 50 to his credit, won his prehm and semifinal, then made an excellent showing against a class field in the finals.

"I thought maybe the longer work he's been doing lately in the 440 might have hurt Rick," said Vitton. "I thought it might take away from some of his explosiveness, but he did alright."

Meadows high jumper Jeff Lund improved on his school record with a 6-4, good for second place, and Sutton, Dave Boursaw, Pete Till and Dave Crow set another RM indoor mark in the mile relay with a 3:37.4.

Mustang shotputter Rich Huber, another junior, hit for his best distance of the season, a 50-11½ toss, to take sixth place. Pole vaulter Mike Quinnett went 13-4.

Conant's mile relay team finished right ahead of Meadows for sixth place in 3:36.8. Other Cougar trackmen who recorded season-bests were vaulter Jeff Carter (13-0), and miler Bill Baird (4:32.4).

Buffalo Grove's Joe Shields turned in a 9:58.1 for sixth place in the two-mile.

HOFFMAN ESTATES won a triangular meet at Lake Park by taking seven firsts, including a :54.6 for Steve Lind in the 440, a 4:45.6 mile for Charlie Squires, and a triple jump of 40-4½ by Bill DiPuma. Randy Krz-mann took places in four events for Hoffman.

Karl Marx and the reserve clause

Jim Murray

(HEADLINE: "Baseball's Reserve Clause Topples. Player Rep Marvin Miller Calls Owners' Proposal 'Enlightened For 1966 But Laughable For 1976.' Owner-Player Gap Widens.")

We take you now to a cemetery outside London where an aging bearded character sits atop a headstone with a copy of "Das Capital" in one hand and the Communist Manifesto in the other. Karl Marx is approached by a reporter.

Reporter: "Herr Marx, we have a problem. Baseball as an industry is involved in a class struggle. The workers seek to free themselves from lifetime indenture to one slave master."

Marx: "Ha! High time! Players of the world, unite! You have nothing to lose but the reserve clause! As Rousseau so aptly put it."

Reporter: "We have a problem, though, and we need your advice. The owners threaten a lockout. They propose to padlock an industry because they say they cannot run it without a reserve clause."

Marx: "Bah! The capitalists always say that! If the world needs your product, someone will produce it. Let the workers take over."

Reporter: "The workers? You mean the players?"

Marx: "Certainly! Let's take one company. Is there any reason the workers can't run it?"

Reporter: "You mean, like the Philadelphia Phillies?"

Marx: "Whoever. Let the players run it. Communize it. Sovietize it. Split the profit evenly. What could be simpler?"

Reporter: "Wait a minute! You mean Greg Luzinski, Mike Schmidt make the same amount of money as Terry Harmon?"

Marx: "Whatever."

Reporter: "But Greg Luzinski batted .340 with 34 home runs and 120 runs-batted-in. Mike Schmidt hit 33 home runs and batted in 95 runs. Terry Harmon batted .181 with no home runs and only five runs-batted-in. I don't think Luzinski and Schmidt are going to like that."

Marx: "Like?! What's to like?! Are we building a workers' paradise or aren't we?"

Reporter: "But Luzinski makes $200,000 a year and Harmon the minimum, $15,000. I don't think they want to Sovietize the industry that much! They just want to be able to sell themselves to the highest bidder each year."

Marx: "Capitalist pigs! All right, let the company be run by the highest-paid slave. That should solve your problems."

Maybe folks were a little skeptical about taking stock in America 200 years ago.

We were young. At war. With no experience. And who knew if we'd ever pay back the money? Well, 200 years have passed. And the U.S. government has always paid in full. To the penny. Now that's not a bad record.

In fact, you might say we're now a pretty well-established outfit to do business with.

So join the Payroll Savings Plan and save with today's Bicentennial issue of Series E Savings Bonds. It's easy. It's automatic.

And it's safe. After 200 years, you know we're here to stay.

Now I don't have to hold to maturity of Series E's. The first year I can cash it out. It's a real handy feature. When I want to, I can cash it out at any time. But I can't cash it out until I've held it for one year. I can't cash it out until I've held it for one year.

Elk Grove's Tim Connelly pummels the pommel horse

Hinsdale Central, although they won their sixth state title in seven years, was far from the whole show at the Illinois State Gymnastics Tournament at Prospect this weekend.

Dale Brungraber of Wheeling (above) was among the top finishers in his specialty, the still rings.

Mark Waclawski of Rolling Meadows joined state champion teammate Keith Liszewski on the high bar as four of the five medalists came from the Mid-Suburban League.

Hersey, the last non-Hinsdale team to win the state title finished the year in fine fashion as they brought home the second place trophy.

And, of course, there was Hinsdale Central. It seems there will always be Hinsdale, making life hard for the rest of the state's gymnastics teams, and the Red Devil fans were primed and ready for another championship celebration.

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1969."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Flatfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karlzen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karlzen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Paul sat down recently to dis-

Lawyers, judge huddle today on sewer plant tiff

Attorneys for the Metropolitan Sanitary District, Elk Grove Village and Des Plaines will meet today with U.S. District Judge George Leighton to seek a resolution of problems delaying construction of the district's new sewage treatment plant.

The conference, at 3:30 a.m. in Leighton's Federal court chamber, was called after officials presented legal arguments for and against the proposed O'Hare Water Reclamation Plant last week. The plant is to be located on 106 acres at Oakton Street and Elmhurst Road.

Des Plaines officials are attempting to block the project in federal court, objecting to the construction standards proposed by the MSD and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Elk Grove Village is backing the $117 million treatment plant, saying it will alleviate chronic flooding problems in the village.

ELK GROVE VILLAGE is represented by Edward Hofert. Des Plaines' attorney is Robert Minetz.

MSD Atty. James Murray said oral arguments were presented Thursday without any major decision made.

He said today's meeting will be to review pleadings in the case in preparation for more court sessions.

Murray said the MSD is attempting to show that environmental impact assessments by the EPA prove the plant will have no adverse effect on residents, despite Des Plaines' contention that more stringent local health ordinances must be followed.

"WE FEEL THE EPA gave adequate attention to the environmental assessments," Murray said. He said the EPA made some recommendations for changing construction plans for the O'Hare plant, and those changes have been made.

Elk Grove Village officials said flooding in the village this week is proof that the treatment plant is needed. Trustee Nancy L. Vanderweil said village officials took photographs of flooded areas to support their contention.

The O'Hare Water Reclamation Plant issue also is before the Illinois Supreme Court where Des Plaines is arguing that local health ordinances must be followed by MSD in building (Continued on Page 5)

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 18-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Look for comet Saturday

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Clupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Clupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Clupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

Wanted: a new home, different life

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Patty is 16 going on 17, and life has been something less than a carnival for her. But, things are getting better.

While many of her high school friends were absorbed in the carefree life of adolescence, like dates and parties, Patty was going through her own little hell.

She took refuge within the walls of Elk Grove High School, where she is a senior, where good times and smiles could be shared.

BUT, THERE WAS always the return home where alcoholic parents were at each other's throats. The family foundation slowly cracked, ending in a broken home.

The advice and reassuring companionship Patty needed was not easily found. Just as Omni-House: Youth Services Bureau in Wheeling was launching its transitional living program, Patty walked in the agency's front door.

She is one of the first teen-agers, who are products of broken homes or have troubles with their parents to be "matched" with a suburban adult who is eager to lend a helping hand.

Patty's roommate for the past two months has been Sue McCaw, Des Plaines, a 24-year-old divorcee who understands the conflicts in Patty's life. She once had some of her own.

UNFORTUNATELY, Omni-House officials say there are too many teen-agers like Patty in the Northwest suburbs and not enough adults like Sue.

"Learning to live with other people is something that everyone has to learn. But when you come from a broken home or you've had problems as a teenager, it's more difficult," said Michele Williams, director of the Omni-House transitional living program.

The new program allows older teens to live for between six months and a year with a single person or married couple in the suburbs before going out to live on their own. The teen learns the skills of independent living: how to manage money, sign leases, pay monthly bills, keep house, do laundry and cook meals.

Omni-House recently received a child welfare agency license from the Illinois Dept. of Children and Family Services to coordinate the transitional living program, which is available to all suburban residents.

IT IS ALSO offering a youth advocacy program, where a volunteer adult spends about 15 hours each week with troubled youths, offering companionship and counseling. A long-term foster-care program places wards of the state or local children without homes into foster homes in the community.

"Not all of the kids we're dealing with in these programs have been in trouble. Many of them just have no families," Ms. Williams said.

However, the transitional living program, the first of the three child welfare programs to be started, has been slow to get off the ground. Only three youths have been placed in homes.

"There is a growing need for this type of program. Yet, people say they are too busy with their own lives to the plant. City ordinances impose strict standards for sewage emissions and requires the district to obtain a city permit before construction can begin. Des Plaines' ordinances are more stringent than those previously followed by the MSD.

The high court is expected to rule on the issue this week.

Family to be probed by social therapists

Self-awareness and personal growth are the goals of "The Family Scene," a program sponsored by the Maine-Oakton-Niles Adult Continuing Education Program.

Social therapists from Forest Hospital, Des Plaines, will lead participants Tuesday in examining the family, particularly as it exists in apartment complexes.

The series emphasizes the application of transactional analysis in helping the individual discover himself.

Sessions are held at 8 p.m. at the Greenwood Trace Recreation Center, 884 Knight Ave., Des Plaines. Admission is $2 and $1 for senior citizens.

City clerk to seek bids for 250 trees

Des Plaines officials have authorized the city clerk to advertise for bids for 250 trees for the city's spring tree planting program. The trees will be planted throughout the city.

Thieves take jewels, stereo equipment

Burglars stole an estimated $765 worth of stereo equipment, including a turntable, two speakers, a tape player and 80 albums from the Des Plaines apartment of David P. Riley, 477 Graceland St., police said Sunday.

Marilyn J. Kelly, 134 Roxbury St., also told police her home was burglarized of $350 in jewels and collectors' coins.

The woman reportedly returned home from a trip Saturday and discovered the theft.

A wedding band and a ring were among the stolen property, police said.

$44,700 traffic signal bid awarded

Des Plaines officials have awarded a $44,700 contract for installation of a traffic signal at Golf Road and Sixth Avenue.

The low bidder, Aldridge Electric Inc., Libertyville, is expected to install the signal this spring. The bid was more than $6,000 under an estimate by City Engineer Robert Bowen.

Bowen said the state has reviewed plans for another traffic signal at Oakton Street and Webster Lane, and the city expects to advertise for bids on that project in about a month.

get involved with someone else's, especially a teenager's," she said.

BUT, SUE MCCAW has a "special interest" in "confused teens like Patty," she said.

"A woman helped me to get my head straight and took me into her home when I left my own house at 18. Then, I had bitter feelings toward my mother," Ms. McCaw said.

"She helped me to see and understand my mother and other people. She helped me learn to do things for myself. She was just there to help me. Now, I want to do the same for teenagers with those problems," she said.

The two women have adjusted to each other quickly. They don't get in each other's way, yet share a lot of good conversation. Ms. McCaw is not interested in keeping track of Patty's every move, and Patty doesn't care about her roommate's social life.

BUT OPEN exchange of feelings, emotions and ideas has been "a wonderful learning experience for both of us," McCaw said.

"I think the program is very important and should be continued. I plan to take in another teenager once Patty feels she's ready to go out on her own," she said.

Omni-House receives state funds for the transitional living program to reimburse participants for the shelter and food for the teens.

"Will that act as an incentive to get people in the program? I don't know, Ms. Williams said. "But this program is a thing of the future. There is a growing need for people to take care of people. You'd think there would be more people who care."

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on these skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Fistfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karzen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karzen is still a young man.

He's 16 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

FEELINGS WITHIN, Wheeling High School's or- ches- tis concert, will be presented March 10-12 at 8 p.m. in the school's little theater. Tickets are $1 in advance and $1.25 at the door. Seats may be reserved by calling director Barbara Rubin, 537-6500, ext. 67. The cast includes Wheeling High School students, from left, Vicky McHugh, Nancy Thomas and Kim Peterson.

Village gets aid to redevelop Milwaukee Ave.

Wheeling will use a $20,000 federal grant to have plans drawn for the re- development of Milwaukee Avenue business district.

The money was made available to the village through the federal Housing and Community Development Act. Village officials will hire a consultant to plan the redevelopment.

Thomas Markus, assistant village manager, said village officials hope to develop the Milwaukee Avenue business area around a central theme.

"FIVE YEARS FROM now, we hope the whole area will take on an entirely different look. We want to dress up the area so people don't feel like they're driving through the South Side of Chicago," he said.

Markus said the consultant will be asked to develop "a detailed land-use plan."

"We want to get down to a lot-by-lot plan for Milwaukee Avenue business- es, residences and major inter- sections. We would like a central theme for the area, whether it be colonial or modern day," he said.

The village will hold public hearings on the proposed plan so residents and property owners can submit their ideas for the area, Markus said.

"WE HAVE TO get the (property) owners involved or the plan won't work," he said.

Markus said he foresees developing Milwaukee Avenue as "a specialty type shopping area" similar to Long Grove.

"It should be an area that would draw a steady clientele that wouldn't be drained off by a shopping center. We could have class restaurants, antique stores and other specialty shops," he said.

Markus said Milwaukee Avenue already has a start on being a specialty area because of the number of restaurants and antique stores located on the street. He said the proximity of the forest preserve also increases chances for turning the area into an attractive shopping district.

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Freshmen Sheryl Small and John Wandall won first place trophies at the York Community High School tournament in Elmhurst.

John Wandall carried off the first-place trophy at the Oak Park-River Forest tournament. The teams of John Wandall and Sheryl Small and Tracy Griffith and Pete Richardson both had a three-win and one-loss record.

The team placed second in the novice division at the Wheaton North tournament. John Wandall won a fifth-place speaker award. Wandall and Pete Richardson had a four-win and no-loss record, while Sheryl Small and Lynda Schemansky had two wins and two losses.

At the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana, tournament in late January, Scott Olson and John Staudt went to the quarter finals in the junior varsity competition with a five-win and one-loss record. Cheryl Zeken qualified in the category of dramatic interpretation in the northern district competition and will travel to Colorado in late June to compete for national debate honors.

Students at Wheeling High School recently donated the proceeds from bake sales to two causes.

Proceeds from the student council's bake sale went to provide for a refuge along the Mississippi River for the American bald eagle. Students Sue Rosenbaum and Sue Oslovich organized the sale.

The high school's Spanish Club sponsored a similar sale to raise funds to provide relief for the Guatemalan earthquake victims.

A Buffalo Grove High School student recently won first place in the category of dramatic interpretation at the National Forensic League's northern district competition.

Senior Cheryl Zeken, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Zeken, placed first over 25 contestants.

Cheryl will travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., in June to compete with Forensic League winners from across the country for the national championship.

New village bus routes start today

New routes for the Wheeling village bus system go into effect today.

Changes in the bus routes include service to the Northbrook train station twice during the morning and evening commuter periods. The new routes also will make connections with two North Suburban Mass Transit System bus routes to the Chicago Loop and the Old Orchard Shopping Center.

The new routes increase the number of trips to certain areas within the village, including Spruce, Cedar and Tahoe drives, Buffalo Grove Road, Sunset Lane, Manchester Drive and Strong Street.

Bus service through the end of March will be free of charge. Local fares will be 25 cents for adults 17 to 25 years of age, and 10 cents for senior citizens, handicapped persons and children ages 8 to 16 years. Children age 7 and under ride free. Bus schedules are available at the Wheeling municipal building, 255 W. Dundee Rd. For more information, call 527-2141.

Hynek heads music group

Suzanne Hynek, 1200 W. Anthony Rd., Wheeling, recently was elected president of the East Central Division of the Music Teachers National Assn.

A nationally certified independent teacher of piano, Hynek will represent the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio at the week-long MTNA convention in Dallas, Tex.

Ambulance fee discussion tonight

A recommendation to charge for ambulance calls outside the village limits will be discussed tonight by the Wheeling Village board.

The meeting will be at 8 p.m. at the municipal building, 255 W. Dundee Rd.

Village Mgr. George Passolt said he will ask board members to approve an ambulance-use fee for nonvillage residents serviced by the municipal fire department. The village department is part of the Wheeling Rural Fire Protection District and serves unincorporated areas near the village.

Passolt suggested an ambulance fee in January after trustees learned that 31 per cent of all ambulance runs were to nonvillage residents.

The village pays for paramedic and ambulance service out of general tax revenue collected from Wheeling residents, and officials want to supplement the funds with a service fee. The fire district is also considering ambulance tax referendum for later this year to provide funds for ambulance and paramedic services.

Milwaukee Avenue as village historical sites. Some of the oldest buildings include Hugo House at the intersection of Mors and Milwaukee Ave.; the Schneider House, 133 N. Milwaukee Ave., and the Wolf House, 119 Milwaukee Ave. Historical society officials said many of the buildings were constructed about 1840.

"The area does have a lot of potential. We have to start somewhere and a plan is the best place to start," Markus said.

Taxing power main issue

Voters to decide on home rule

Lake County voters will go to the polls March 16 to decide whether the county should be given home-rule powers.

A similar proposal was defeated in 1972 when Lake County voters, along with voters in eight other Illinois counties, rejected home rule.

The main objection has been the taxing power given to home-rule units under the 1970 Illinois Constitution.

"Power to govern means power to tax," said Mrs. Ellis Fuqua of the League of Women Voters at a recent forum. "That's unpopular but true."

A home-rule unit may not, however, license for revenue; impose taxes upon income or earnings, or tax occupations, unless the legislature grants those powers. Nor does home rule govern property tax assessments, elections or courts.

BY A THREE-FIFTHS vote in the legislature, the Illinois General Assembly may preempt some of the counties' rights under home rule. The legislature already has preempted the counties' right to license certain professions and organizations.

"If we don't give taxing latitude to governmental units, we're going to get incremental real estate tax increases year to year," Jay Smith, field coordinator for the Urban Counties Council, said at the forum.

Home rule, he said, "would allow counties to develop revenue sources other than the real property tax."

Cook County, which became a home-rule county automatically when the constitution was approved, has instituted taxes on mobile homes, cigars, liquor and automobiles.

Randy Shick, an attorney with the Illinois Dept. of Local Government Affairs, said any proposed tax would receive full public hearing.

"IF WE WERE a home-rule unit, the county board could issue more than $19 million in general-obligation bonds without a referendum. That's a little too much," said Robert Magruder of the Lake County Contractors Assn.

According to Stephanie Cole, a research associate at the Institute of Government and Public Affairs, University of Illinois, 16 of the 37 Illinois home-rule units have issued general obligation bonds.

The Constitutional Convention's local government committee declared the powers to tax and incur debt "are essential if home rule is to enable counties and municipalities to perform the functions demanded of them in this increasingly complex and urbanized world," according to Cole.

Other arguments in favor and against home-rule powers for Lake County include:

PRO:

- County officials, rather than state officials, best know local needs;
- The legislature often obligates the counties to spend money on programs without providing the revenue. Home rule would provide some relief;
- Home rule would give county governments authority they presently may not have under Illinois statutes to receive federal grants;
- County home rule would generate creative local initiative in problem solving;

- County home rule would increase citizen participation at the local level.
- The county executive, required for county home rule, would provide visible leadership;
- Home rule would take administrative routine out of legislative county board functions for a more efficient operation of county government;

- The county executive form of government creates the best system of checks and balances because of the separation of powers.

CONS:

- County governments serve vested and parochial interests, and home rule would augment the authority of those interests;

- Home rule would conflict with the need for uniform performance levels on certain programs throughout the state;

- If home rule is approved, the county executive candidates would be chosen by their central committees and, therefore, would be political products;

- There would be serious problems in the transition of a county to home rule because of abrupt organizational changes;

- The county home rule expanded taxing powers would lead to abuses and excess spending;

- Under the county executive, there is the danger of "bossism," with an over-concentration of political power;

- County home rule creates potential conflicts between other governmental units, such as municipalities and townships;

- The entire concept of county home rule is full of uncertainties that would require court tests for solutions.

If home rule is approved in the primary, the county central committees will select Democratic and Republican candidates for county executive. The office then would be decided in the November general election.

Grace Mary Stern, county clerk, emphasized that home rule vote would

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Fisticuff."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karlzen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karlzen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Bobby licks rare disease, now awaits his turn at bat

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed, that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky,"

Business fee increase before panel

A proposed increase of almost 100 per cent in business license fees for Buffalo Grove merchants will be discussed by the village board tonight.

The proposed increase is being opposed by members of the Buffalo Grove Chamber of Commerce and the Plaza Verde Merchants' Assn. Both organizations said they plan to have representatives at the board meeting tonight.

The increase is being proposed because current fees, established in 1969, do not cover the cost of annual village inspections, said Village Clerk Verna Clayton.

BUFFALO GROVE now collects fees from 100 businesses, Mrs. Clayton said. The biggest hikes will come for the 15 food establishments, because they require more inspections than the 38 service and 47 retail stores, she said.

The proposed fees range from $75 to $285 for food establishments and $50 to $130 for service and retail stores.

The fee request will be discussed at 8 p.m. at the village hall, 60-Raupp Blvd.

The current fee structure produces approximately $4,000 per year and the proposed rates would generate approximately $7,000, Mrs. Clayton said.

BASED ON A report prepared by Village Engineer Arnold Seaberg, the new rates will only cover the cost of village inspections and might be increased further by the village board, Mrs. Clayton said.

Wheeling - Buffalo Grove

High School Dist. 214

Buffalo Grove High School debate team members Mike Trenadue and Scott Olson qualified to go Downstate at the recent Illinois Speech and Theater Assn. sectionals held at Rockford East High School. The two students were selected for the finals by the coaches at the tournament.

Freshmen Sheryl Small and John Wandall won first place trophies at the York Community High School tournament in Elmhurst. John Wandall carried off the first-place trophy at the Oak Park-River Forest tournament. The teams of John Wandall and Sheryl Small and Tracy Griffith and Pete Richardson both had a three-win and one-loss record.

The team placed second in the novice division at the Wheaton North tournament. John Wandall won a fifth-place speaker award. Wandall and Pete Richardson had a four-win and no-loss record, while Sheryl Small and Lynda Schemansky had two wins and two losses.

At the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana, tournament in late January, Scott Olson and John Staudt went to the quarter finals in the junior varsity competition with a five-win and one-loss record. At the Rockford Jefferson tournament, novice level teammates, Loretta Chany and Marc Mayo and Jeff Cazal and Joey Locante, both chalked up two wins and two losses.

Cheryl Zeken qualified in the category of dramatic interpretation in the northern district competition and will travel to Colorado in late June to compete for national debate honors.

Students at Wheeling High School recently donated the proceeds from bake sales to two causes.

Proceeds from the student council's bake sale went to provide for a refuge along the Mississippi River for the American bald eagle. Students Sue Rosenbaum and Sue Oslovich organized the sale.

The high school's Spanish Club sponsored a similar sale to raise funds to provide relief for the Guatemalan earthquake victims.

A Buffalo Grove High School student recently won first place in the category of dramatic interpretation at the National Forensic League's northern district competition.

Senior Cheryl Zeken, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Zeken, placed first over 25 contestants.

Cheryl will travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., in June to compete with Forensic League winners from across the country for the national championship.

Look for comet Saturday

Another chance to see the light

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 30 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

3 seek 32nd District Dem spots

Three candidates are seeking the two Democratic nominations for state representative in the 32nd District in the March 16 primary.

Incumbent Daniel M. Pierce of Highland Park is completing his sixth term in the Illinois General Assembly. He presently serves as chairman of the Illinois House Committee on Environment, Energy and Natural Resources and as a member of the elementary and secondary education and insurance committees of the House. He also is on the Illinois Commission on Intergovernmental Cooperation and the energy resources commission.

Pierce has been given several outstanding legislator awards by the Independent Voters of Illinois. He has specialized in legislation to clean up Lake Michigan, to control pesticides and to improve the education of physically and mentally handicapped children.

He served as minority whip of the Illinois House from 1971 through 1974. He is a graduate of Harvard Law School and a practicing attorney.

Hoping to share the ballot with Pierce in November is Marlene Damato of Ingleside, in the opposite corner of Lake County from Highland Park.

She believes the Democrats have a chance to elect two representatives in November. (The Republican incumbents, Betty Lou Reed of Deerfield and Donald Deuster of Mundelein, are running uncontested in their primary.) "It's time we ended the tokenism that's been handed us in the 32nd," she says.

The main issues, Mrs. Damato believes, are ecology — preserving the recreational waterways and recreational areas in the western part of the district — and full funding of state aid to education. She also supports the Equal Rights Amendment.

Mrs. Damato is employed by Baxter Laboratories in Round Lake.

The third primary candidate, Casey Kuklinski of Wildwood, was Pierce's running mate in November 1972. He is employed at Montgomery Ward in Waukegan as a commissioned appliance salesman.

The main issue in Kuklinski's primary campaign has been Mrs. Damato's right to a place on the ballot. A Sangamon County judge ordered the state Board of Elections to place Mrs. Damato's name on the ballot Jan. 29. She had filed a statement of economic interest with the Illinois Secretary of State's office but had not filed a receipt of that filing with the board of elections, as required, a Springfield newspaper reported. The judge said the "right of a person to be on a ballot outweighs the fact that filing the statement (receipt) is several weeks late." Kuklinski says the state Board of Elections should be abolished. "I don't think it serves any useful function," he says.

State's Attorney

Gamberdino: County needs more professional office

Nello Gamberdino of Deerfield thinks he is the most experienced of the three candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for Lake County state's attorney in the March 16 primary.

"I appear to be the most qualified candidate, certainly because of my experience as a state prosecutor, and also educationally and professionally I outdistance my opponents," Gamberdino said.

He served as an assistant state's attorney in Cook County for eight years and as an assistant state's attorney in Lake County for two years. He currently is in private practice.

According to Gamberdino, Lake County needs a more professional state's attorney's office. "We need career prosecutors. I want young men interested in staying in the office, not a year or two internship for a defense practice," Gamberdino said.

Contacting law schools to find qualified graduates interested in a career as a prosecutor is a method to achieve professionalism, Gamberdino said. And assistant state's attorneys need more training once they enter the office, according to Gamberdino.

Better cooperation between the state's attorney's office and local police departments is also needed, he said. He also said many cases are being plea bargained that don't need to be.

Bacall: Plans to donate $10,000 of salary to charity

Elliot S. Bacall, one of three candidates for the Democratic nomination for Lake County state's attorney, says if he's elected he will serve only one 4-year term.

Bacall, a resident of Deerfield, also says he would donate up to $10,000 of the state's attorney's yearly salary to Lake County charities that primarily benefit disadvantaged children. (The state's attorney's salary will rise from $30,000 to $42,600 a year in December.)

"Any capable lawyer and administrator who cannot straighten out the prosecutor's office and clean up the county in four years could not do it in 20 years," Bacall says.

Bacall, a former assistant state's attorney who left the office in June, says he is "far better qualified" than either of his primary opponents. "I have current experience," he says. "As soon as I go into the office I can make the necessary changes."

Bacall currently is in private practice with offices in Highwood and Grayslake, specializing in criminal law.

If elected, he says, he would reorganize the state's attorney's office so that new attorneys would be supervised by more experienced attorneys.

The incumbent, Jack Hoogasian, seems to "drive away people with talent because he doesn't want competition," Bacall says.

Ryan: Office restructure needed

Dennis Ryan of Libertyville is one of three candidates running in the first contested Democratic primary for Lake County state's attorney in 20 years.

He believes there are two reasons for the unusual amount of interest in the nomination: the emergence of the Democratic party in Lake County and the "fairly large amount of dissatisfaction" with the Republican incumbent, Jack Hoogasian, who is running unopposed in his party's primary.

Ryan is a former partner in the Chicago law firm of Kirkland & Ellis and recently joined a Waukegan firm. His legal experience is as a civil trial lawyer. He is a member of the Libertyville Village Board and also serves as Libertyville Township Attorney, an appointive post.

He has been endorsed by the two current Democratic occupants of countywide office, Sheriff E. J. "Chick" LaMagdeleine and County Clerk Grace Mary Stern.

Ryan believes the two main issues in the primary campaign are "who would be the best state's attorney and who has the best chance of beating Jack Hoogasian."

If elected, Ryan would restructure the state's attorney's office into a criminal division, a special prosecutions division and a civil division.

Five in running for clerk's office

There is a contest in both parties for the office of Lake County Circuit clerk, with three Republicans and two Democrats running in the March 16 primary.

Republican candidates include Dawn Marie Mardoian of Waukegan, Paul R. Hatten of Zion and Harry Thomas of Libertyville.

Democratic candidates are Bertha Ogrin of Waukegan and Mary M. Cizerle of Waukegan.

Miss Mardoian has worked in the Waukegan City Clerk's office, the Waukegan Police Department and the Lake County State's Attorney's office. She is a state certified deputy registrar of birth and death records.

Hatten is the Lake County deputy circuit clerk. He has served as justice of the peace for 12 years, police magistrate for eight years, and magistrate of the circuit court for two years.

Thomas is a Libertyville businessman and a former educator. He is owner and publisher of Media Workshop, a publishing firm he founded in 1970. He has been the associate director of program development and manager of training programs for Science Research Associates, a division of IBM, and a teacher at Illinois Youth Commission school for boys at St. Charles.

Mrs. Ogrin currently is a Lake County Board member from Dist. 3, ending her first term on the county board. She has been a commissioner for the Waukegan Park District, and is vice chairman of the Lake County Democratic Central Committee.

Mrs. Cizerle is a legal secretary, and has held executive positions with the Lake County Legal Secretaries Association and the Legal Students Association of Legal Secretaries. She has studied speech and English at Western Illinois University.

GOP contest for auditor's post

The only contest in the Lake County Auditor's election is on the Republican side.

Clyde W. Barnes of Lake Forest and Robert Milton of Lake Forest are vying for the Republican nomination.

Democrat Dennis J. Siena of Wheeling withdrew from the auditor's race for personal reasons, leaving only Walter C. Griffin of Waukegan running for the Democratic nomination.

Barnes is the chief deputy auditor, and has served in that office since 1969. Prior to that, he worked with the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. of Chicago, auditing governmental units. He is a certified public accountant.

Milton has been active in Republican politics for many years, and has served for 18 years as the chairman of the Lake County Republican Central Committee. He has been in charge of field audits for several agencies.

Three in race for recorder's post

Democratic voters in Lake County will have two candidates to choose from in the March 16 primary for the office of recorder of deeds.

Lawrence A. Dennis of Mundelein and Donna Rink of Round Lake are running for the Democratic nomination.

Incumbent Frank J. Nustra of Highwood is running unopposed on the Republican side.

Dennis is a broker with Century-21

Tegg Realty in Half Day. He is a licensed realtor, and has experience in handling documents from the recorder's office.

Mrs. Rink is a student of the College of Lake County, majoring in social science. She has been an election judge and a member of the Business Women's Assn. of Lake County. She owns and operates a dance studio in Round Lake Beach, and also works for a municipal contractor.

Business fee hike before panel today

(Continued from page 1) Commerce Board of Directors is "not against an increase per se, but we're against the high amount of the increase," said Jackie Brinn, chamber president.

"We're just questioning how they got their figures," Ms. Brinn said. "And if they're just making even money now, what will happen next year as the cost of living goes up?"

"Arlington Heights has more to offer in the way of transportation with the train and cab service and other services, it's just a more established community," Ms. Brinn said recently, saying Arlington Heights business fees are lower. "We are all pioneers in Buffalo Grove but we are hoping to help it grow into a stronger community. The proposed license fees will force the small businessmen out."

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

$250,000 asked for access road to Busse Woods

by TOM VON MALDER

State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, has reintroduced legislation appropriating $250,000 from the state road fund for construction of an access road from Biesterfeld Road into the Busse Woods recreation area.

The legislation is similar to a bill vetoed last year by Gov. Daniel Walker and which Walker said again in January he would not approve.

Local officials have sought the access road so that the expected millions of visitors to the recreation area will not have to travel on Bisner Road, a residential street. The recreational area is not open.

The access road would only be needed if the proposed Interstate 90-Biesterfeld Road interchange is built. Village Trustee Edward W. Kenna Jr., who does not want the interchange built and who would rather have an access road into the area off Higgins Road, last week said of Regner's action, "I don't know if that is the solution."

"IT WILL HELP the people who live on Bisner," he said, adding that without some other access road to the recreational area, the homeowners on Bisner Road are likely to have visitors to the area driving across their lawns as well as up their street.

Kenna says he does not understand how Cook County can "get away" with saying access must be from Biesterfeld Road.

Trustee Nanci L. Vanderwell, who favors the Regner access road, said she doubts Walker will sign the appropriation if it is again passed by the state legislature.

"I don't think he (Walker) really realizes what this exit and entrance is about. I think he just sees dollar signs," she said.

MRS. VANDERWELL said she doubted that because it is an election year Walker would be influenced. "I don't think it will have any influence as far as Walker is concerned."

"Hopefully, it will be someone else considering the bill," Kenna said.

At a January meeting of the Elk Grove Estates Homeowners Assn., Walker said he would not approve the

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Look for comet Saturday

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

ESTHER BENSON, a "Town Meeting" participant, was one of many who pondered local problems Saturday such as transportation, school districting and participation in local government.

Lawyers, judge to huddle on sewage plant solution

Attorneys for the Metropolitan Sanitary District, Elk Grove Village and Des Plaines will meet today with U.S. District Judge George Leighton to seek a resolution of problems delaying construction of the district's new sewage treatment plant.

The conference, at 8:30 a.m. in Leighton's Federal court chamber, was called after officials presented legal arguments for and against the proposed O'Hare Water Reclamation Plant last week. The plant is to be located on 106 acres at Oakton Street and Elmhurst Road.

Des Plaines officials are attempting to block the project in federal court, objecting to the construction standards proposed by the MSD and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Elk Grove Village is backing the $117 million treatment plant, saying it will alleviate chronic flooding problems in the village.

ELK GROVE VILLAGE is represented by Edward Hofert. Des Plaines' attorney is Robert Minetz.

MSD Atty. James Murray said oral arguments were presented Thursday without any major decision made.

He said today's meeting will be to review pleadings in the case in preparation for more court sessions.

Murray said the MSD is attempting to show that environmental impact assessments by the EPA prove the plant will have no adverse effect on residents, despite Des Plaines' contention that more stringent local health ordinances must be followed.

"WE FEEL THE EPA gave adequate attention to the environmental $250,000 for the access road because the project had not been given a high priority by his transportation experts. "If you can persuade them the road has a high priority, then I will put it into the road program," he said at that time.

Mrs. Vanderweel said she would favor the village board passing a resolution in support of Regner's reintroduced legislation.

assessments," Murray said. He said the EPA made some recommendations for changing construction plans for the O'Hare plant, and those changes have been made.

Elk Grove Village officials said flooding in the village this week is proof that the treatment plant is needed. Trustee Nancy L. Vanderweel said village officials took photographs of flooded areas to support their contention.

The O'Hare Water Reclamation Plant issue also is before the Illinois Supreme Court where Des Plaines is arguing that local health ordinances must be followed by MSD in building the plant. City ordinances impose strict standards for sewage emissions and requires the district to obtain a city permit before construction can begin. Des Plaines' ordinances are more stringent than those previously followed by the MSD.

The high court is expected to rule on the issue this week.

Better transit, communication proposed here

by DANN GIRE

The sign says: "This is not a season to be mealy-mouthed or to mince matters; the times are precarious and perilous."

This quote, from a newspaper published in 1776, was one of several on the walls in Elk Grove High School Saturday as more than 180 persons turned out for "Town Meeting '76," an exercise in grass roots government.

And as for the mealy-mouthedness and mincing of matters, Elk Grove residents left them behind to come through with avowed awareness in local government after pointing out key problem areas in the village.

AFTER A FULL day of discussion and workshops on the village's most pressing needs, residents presented three economic proposals:

- A study to select the most economical transit system followed by a referendum to ask voters to provide necessary funding.

- Public meetings and surveys of local civic groups to determine transportation needs of the community.

- Cuts in village administrative expenses through reduction in budgets, work week and obtaining volunteer help.

Political improvements residents said are needed include more "grass roots" participation, better communication with the government and more person-to-person contact through establishment of a village public relations official.

The town meeting also showed that citizens wanted a single school district, rather than separate elementary and high school districts, better utilization of senior citizens' resources and strengthening of the council of service organizations in Elk Grove.

"Town Meeting '76," an official Bicentennial event, was an all-day affair beginning at 9 a.m. with morning study sessions to determine Elk Grove Village's biggest problems. Afternoon study groups then tackled the problems for workable answers.

Work groups also wrote a village song to the tune of "East Side, West Side" and developed a village symbol comprised of two triangles one each representing youth and the wise encircled with an arrow cutting across the diameter. The symbol theme is "Young and Wise, Unite for Progress."

While the regular town meeting was being conducted, the smaller members of society, the kids, were preparing their own list of goods and bads about the village.

Among the "liked" things were fresh air, forest preserves, nice police and firemen, not many fights between kids, space for playing and most of the teachers who were "nice."

On the list of things the kids really thought could be improved were: not enough stores for young people, tough BB gun laws, restrictions on pets in apartment, too many R- and X-rated movies, lack of indoor ice and roller skating rinks, and a need for bike trails.

Discussion on adolescence planned

"Is Adolescence All Agony?" will be the subject of a community talk Wednesday, sponsored by the Elk Grove-Schaumburg Townships Mental Health Center.

The discussion will focus on normal adolescence and the changes that occur when dependence on the family weakens and identification with the peer group strengthens. The needs of the adolescent will be identified and the feelings that arise in both parent and child during this period will be discussed.

The speaker will be Alicerose Barman, a child development consultant with Highland Park School Dist. 108, an advisor to the Ravinia and Deerfield Nursery Schools and faculty member at Northeastern Illinois University and National College of Education.

The session will begin at 7:30 p.m. at Elk Grove High School, Arlington Heights Road and Elk Grove Boulevard. Admission is $3 per individual or family.

The center will be sponsoring talks on "Adjusting to Divorce" and "Facing Death: Yours and Others" in April and May.

Ethics code not needed, Cowin says

by DANN GIRE

Hoffman Estates Trustee William Cowin is a businessman with a dilemma: how to reconcile the role of his profession within the limitations of a political ethics code.

Cowin is a real estate broker, a profession which could bring him in conflict with a proposed ethics ordinance now being considered by village officials.

Ironically, it was Cowin who survived the village's 1968 zoning scandal which sent six of his colleagues to federal penitentiaries. Only Cowin, the board's senior trustee, remained above the bribery scheme.

NOW HE FACES a specter of impropriety because of his chosen profession.

The code prohibits public officials from accepting any income from property owners during the time the property is under village consideration. (Continued on Page 5)

Look for comet Saturday

Another chance to see the light

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

A 142-UNIT APARTMENT building at Wise and Irving Park roads will remain vacant until Schaumburg officials settle a controversy over single ownership and control of the Country Lane development. A portion of the land went to an Ohio mortgage company when Amcon Construction defaulted on payments. The remainder of the site is owned by investors Melvin Lerman and Melvin Isenstein.

eration for zoning or usage changes. It also prohibits officials from accepting income from property owners for one year following the filing of a petition for a change in zoning or use classification.

Cowin, who owns controlling interest in Citadel Real Estate, Hoffman Estates, thinks the ordinance is useless, unnecessary and places "intolerable restrictions" on his professional work.

But Village Pres. Virginia Hayter, who proposed passage of the ordinance, says the measure is not for the welfare of board members, but the public they serve.

"THE ISSUE AT STAKE in this is the morale of the people," she said. "They are suspicious of government today. They think all public officials have ulterior motives."

Cowin views portions of the code as "an infringement of the constitutional right for me and the people who work for me. It interferes with free enterprise."

He said the ethics code is concerned with eliminating "the possibility of any commission member or elected official from unduly influencing board decisions resulting in substantial monetary gain. I believe the key word here is substantial."

Mrs. Hayter said the code applies not only to real estate agents, but "anyone who does business with the village."

THE REAL ESTATE business is hit hardest in the code "because it is the area most vulnerable to attack," she said.

"Any broker is vulnerable, especially when dealing with land that is raw land, open for development," she added.

Cowin said he "does not anticipate doing any business with the village," but Citadel is handling the sale of 30 acres of undeveloped land on Higgins

Disclosures forced by ethics code

The proposed Hoffman Estates ethics ordinance would require village officials to make disclosures in several areas.

The code is based on the Village of Palatine's ethics ordinance and requires an official to disclose if he or any immediate family members own interest in property in Palatine, Hanover, Barrington and Schaumburg townships.

Any official or immediate family member who owns more than 5 percent of a business will be required to disclose all pertinent information concerning the business.

The code requires an official to disclose any debts he may have. It also requires the receipt of gifts with a market value in excess of $50 by any official or immediate family member to be disclosed.

If any official or member of the immediate family has been released from a debt in excess of $100, details of the release must be disclosed by the official.

The ordinance prohibits any income for any village official from transactions of property pending zoning or use classification changes. Income cannot be accepted for one year following any petition filed or any action initiated on property before the village.

Penalty for not signing an ethics statement or violating the agreement will result in a fine of up to $500.

Road west of the Barrington Square Shopping Center. The land has already been zoned commercial.

IF THE JUDICIARY committee now studying the ordinance refuses to change the code, Cowin said he is "not really sure" what action he will take.

The judiciary committee will discuss the code today at 7:30 p.m. in the municipal building, 1200 N. Gannon Dr.

"I'm already part-way into my term (as trustee) and this (code) won't chase me off the board," he said. "On the other hand, I don't intend to get out of the real estate business."

He said he will ask Village Atty. Edward Hofert to determine the constitutionality of the code and will contact other members of the judiciary committee to request if necessary a "sentence by sentence" analysis of the ordinance.

Though Cowin is currently the only

Realtor on the board, Trustee Melvin Timmons, chairman of the judiciary committee, said he is considering entering the real estate field.

TIMMONS SAID the ethics code "will have absolutely no effect on my decision."

"What is good for one is good for all," Timmons said, adding he fully supports the ethics ordinance.

"Everyone in the community should have the right to know where we stand in terms of ground rules and outside monetary influences," he said. "No one should be reluctant to sign an ethics ordinance."

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1980."

Roderick McLeman, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Fistfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karzen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karzen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Plotting growth major focus for Chemplex chief

by JERRY THOMAS

Chemplex Co., Rolling Meadows, and the people who make it tick are celebrating the 10th anniversary of its founding.

Jack Denton, in a sense the company's "founding father" and first employee, heads the firm's 503 employees.

Ask Denton, then and now the company's president and chief executive officer, about the company's growth and he'll say the job is not completed. Chemplex is still growing.

Denton is responsible for shaping Chemplex. A "baby" in the plastics industry in 1966, the company now is established as a leader in an industry dominated by the major chemical and oil companies.

Although Denton talks about other people's contributions to Chemplex as the reason for its success, those around the man say it was his know-how, firm hand and attention to detail that made Chemplex what it is today.

The idea of embarking upon such a large scale operation as Chemplex's administrative and research headquarters in Rolling Meadows and its huge complex of polyethylene producing plants in Iowa is mind boggling.

FOR DENTON, it was "interesting and a challenge" he is still meeting daily.

"I am a detailist and from the beginning Chemplex has been organized with the aim of achieving the highest degree of proficiency and competency with a small staff of experienced and well-motivated people," he said.

The history of the company dates to the mid-60s when Skelly Oil Co. announced jointly with American Can Co., plans to form a new company for plastic resin production.

Resin is one of the raw materials used in the production of plastic products.

Skelly wanted to diversify into petrochemicals from its basic position as a producer, refiner and distributor of oil and gasoline products.

American Can, a packaging manufacturer, could see the distinct trend toward increased use of plastics in the packaging business.

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

CHEMPLEX CO. AND its 503 employees in Rolling Meadows are celebrating the plastic firm's 10th anniversary. Chemplex was one of the first major companies to locate in the city. Chemplex is one of the nation's largest plastic manufacturers.

ADMINISTRATIVE headquarters were planned for Rolling Meadows while Clinton, Iowa, was selected as the site of the new plant.

The Rolling Meadows facility was completed in December, 1967. Denton remembers the new facility as "quite a change from the 5,000-square-foot, one-bathroom temporary offices I worked out of those first few years."

How do you go about creating a company?

"It helps to have a checkbook and the backing and confidence of the joint venture companies," Denton said.

According to Denton, every man who works with the company is the best.

"WE MAKE IT possible for our people to enjoy good benefits almost immediately, instead of after many years of service as in some companies."

"There are no executive kingdoms in Chemplex. Not an executive office in this facility has a huge build-up of staff. Our departments are one-man departments, with everyone producing."

"There is no 'let's let poor old Joe stay around because he isn't really causing too much trouble and it's almost time for his retirement or whatever,' policy here."

"Baloney — 'pay 'em off and let 'em out,' is my philosophy and it's an attitude that has made Chemplex a vibrant company," Denton said.

EVERY EMPLOYEE knows he is the best because "we keep only the best," said Denton.

"Selection of Rolling Meadows as our research and marketing site was a valid decision 10 years ago and is still so today," Denton said.

"This (Chicago area) is where the action is," he said.

Denton said the proximity of O'Hare Airport and highly desirable living area for its employees were prime reasons for the Rolling Meadows selection.

"But, oh my God, what a change a ride to work is from the old days," Denton said. "The same things that worked for us attracted others to the area," he added.

"A RIDE TO the office from my home took about 17 minutes ten years ago and pheasant and geese were about all I'd see."

"Today the same ride calls for a safety helmet, safety belt and twenty-five minutes," Denton said.

If that sounds like a yearning for the old days forget it. Denton is not the kind to look back.

While most see a completed facility in the Rolling Meadows administration building to Denton it is just the beginning of what Chemplex will be in the future.

Discussion of city budget up in air

The Rolling Meadows City Council Finance Committee will meet at 8 p.m. today but aldermen are uncertain if it will begin reviewing the city budget for the coming year.

Acting City Mgr. Charles Green said last week he is still preparing the new budget, which was discussed briefly during the last finance committee meeting.

"I do not know if the committee will go into a budget discussion. Perhaps we will and again maybe not," Green said.

Green said a series of budget meetings will be held, but declined to announce when.

partment heads and last month reviewed briefly with the committee a list of priority equipment purchases from each department.

Although he made no recommendations on additional means to generate revenue, his report did show several alternative means of increasing revenue such as charging for garbage service and imposing a utility tax.

'Sham Rock' set March 13

The Plum Grove Countryside Property Owners Assn. will hold its spring dance, the "Sham Rock," March 13 at the Itasca Country Club.

Ted Favis is chairman of the dance committee.

A Green Bay, Wis., group, "On Stage," will provide a dinner show and music for dancing.

Dist. 211 president to seek third term in April 10 vote

Robert Creek, president of the High School Dist. 211 Board of Education, has filed nominating petitions and will seek a third board term in the April 10 elections.

Creek, 1603 Appleby, Inverness, has been president of the board since he was elected to his first term in 1970. He is vice president-administration for Union Oil Co., Palatine.

Glenn Hargrave, 471 Creekwood Dr., Palatine, has also filed a nominating petition to run for the board. Hargrave served on the board from 1972 until 1975 when he was defeated in his bid for reelection.

Two residents have picked up petitions but have not filed. One is Richard Gillette, 311 W. Daniels Rd., Palatine, who was defeated in his bid for a board seat last year. The other is Mrs. W. K. McCall, 1830 Crandon Ln., Schaumburg.

Candidates must be at least 18 years old, a district resident for at least one year and a registered voter.

Flower show tickets available from parks

The Rolling Meadows Park District is accepting reservations for a trip March 25 to the Chicago Flower Show in McCormick Place.

Women interested in attending the show may call 392-4384 for bus and ticket reservations. Reservations will not be accepted after March 20.

The trip fee is $5.50, and includes bus transportation to and from the park district sports complex at 3900 Owl Dr. and show admission.

The bus will leave the sports complex at 10 a.m. and return at approximately 3 p.m.

Parks name 6 boys to 100-mile skating club

Six Rolling Meadows boys have skated 100 miles to become members of the park district 100-mile club.

Kenneth Smith, Rolling Meadows ice arena manager, said the skaters received district jerseys and patches and have begun skating another 100 miles to become eligible to attain a President's Council on Physical Fitness patch.

The boys are Ed Wojdyla, Paul Klicke, Steve Ballagh, John Rudolph, Jeff Duvall and David Bolf.

The 100-mile club is Smith's way of increasing arena attendance.

Youngsters may register with the park district for the Saturday skating sessions. Recordkeepers keep track of how many laps are completed by each member during the 12:45 to 2:45 p.m. Saturday skating sessions.

Upon completion of 1,200 laps the skaters receive a 100-mile club patch. The President's patch is awarded to those who attain 200 miles.

Anyone interested in more information may call 392-1780.

Parks planning variety of classes

Classes in furniture refinishing, gardening and landscaping, wall papering and tracing family histories begin next month at Salt Creek Park District.

The six-week "Fix-it" course will cover wall papering, canning and repairing china, and will meet from 1 to 3 p.m. each Thursday starting April 1. Fee for residents is $10 and for non-residents $12.

Classes on furniture refinishing from stripping to applying the final coat also will start April 1, and will continue through May 20. The class meets from 7 to 9 p.m., and the fee is $10. Both courses are cosponsored by the Palatine Park District.

An eight-week course in genealogy will be offered beginning April 1 and will meet from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. A four-week session covering gardening and landscaping, including flowers, vegetables, lawn care and trees and shrubs, will begin April 6. The class will meet from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees. "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Fistfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karlsen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karlsen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Paul sat down recently to discuss his campaign.

THE POPULAR Ronald McDonald was the celebrity of the day in an appearance recently before mentally and physically handicapped youngsters at Clearbrook Center, Rolling Meadows.

Old high school triple occupancy debate tonight

The possibility of three agencies using the old Palatine High School building after it is vacated next year will be discussed today at the Palatine Township meeting at 8 p.m. in the town hall, 37 N. Plum Grove Rd., Palatine.

The Village of Palatine, Palatine Township and Palatine Park District have been considering using the building, 150 E. Wood St., to be vacated in September 1977.

Township board members made no comments on an early morning tour of the school building Saturday, preferring to make their opinions known at tonight's meeting.

Township Supervisor Howard Olsen said the full board attended the tour, but he declined to comment on his opinion of the school's new section, covering 72,000 square feet.

Township auditor Charles Zimmerman said he preferred "to keep an open mind" on the school situation and will present his views during the meeting.

The tour of the school was prompted by auditors' request to see the structure before discussing a space study tonight.

Palatine Village Pres Wendell E. Jones last week called on the three agencies interested in the high school to consider funding a joint space-use study, at an estimated cost of between $10,000 and $15,000.

The proposed study should be used to determine the worth of the building and feasibility of converting into governmental use, Jones said.

ACCORDING TO A land appraisal made more than a year ago, the 11-acre site is valued at about $1 million, High School Dist. 211 Supt. Richard Kolze has said.

Interest in the present Palatine High School, which will be replaced by a new school on Rohlfing Road north of the Winston Park subdivision, came about after a citizens' committee appointed by the township board determined a single facility to house all three township agencies would be too expensive.

The Palatine Township funds The Bridge Youth Services, senior citizens' programs and a day-care center.

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedules down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 18-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Look for comet Saturday

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps light years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

ESTHER BENSON, a "Town Meeting '76" participant, was one of many who pondered local problems Saturday such as transportation, school districting and participation in local government.

Dist. 211 president to seek third term in April 10 vote

Robert Creek, president of the High School Dist. 211 Board of Education, has filed nominating petitions and will seek a third board term in the April 10 elections.

Creek, 1603 Appleby, Inverness, has been president of the board since he was elected to his first term in 1970. He is vice president-administration for Union Oil Co., Palatine.

Glenn Hargrave, 471 Creekwood Dr., Palatine, has also filed a nominating petition to run for the board. Hargrave served on the board from 1972 until 1975 when he was defeated in his bid for reelection.

Two residents have picked up petitions but have not filed. One is Richard Gillette, 311 W. Daniels Rd., Palatine, who was defeated in his bid for a board seat last year. The other is Mrs. W. K. McCall, 1830 Crandon Ln., Schaumburg.

Nominating petitions requiring the signatures of 50 registered voters are available at the district office, 1750 Roselle Rd., Palatine. The last day to file petitions is March 19.

Candidates must be at least 18 years old, a district resident for at least one year, and a registered voter.

Parks planning variety of classes

Classes in furniture refinishing, gardening and landscaping, wall papering and tracing family histories begin next month at Salt Creek Park District.

The six-week "Fix-it" course will cover wall papering, canning and repairing china, and will meet from 1 to 3 p.m. each Thursday starting April 1. Fee for residents is $10 and for non-residents $12.

Classes on furniture refinishing from stripping to applying the final coat also will start April 1, and will continue through May 20. The class meets from 7 to 9 p.m., and the fee is $10. Both courses are cosponsored by the Palatine Park District.

An eight-week course in genealogy will be offered beginning April 1 and will meet from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. A four-week session covering gardening and landscaping, including flowers, vegetables, lawn care and trees and shrubs, will begin April 6. The class will meet from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Both courses cost $1 and are cosponsored by Palatine's park district and public library. Call Salt Creek Park District at 256-5890 to register and for information on class locations.

Salary schedule to be disclosed

Salaries for department heads to be included in the 1976-77 Palatine budget are expected to be released tonight at a meeting of the village board.

The board met last week in executive session to discuss salary levels for department heads, but the figures were not released following the meeting.

The figures will be included in the village budget, which is now under preparation by the administration. Salaries for village employees will be negotiated separately for inclusion in the budget.

The board will meet at 9 p.m. at the Palatine Public Library, 500 N. Benton St.

The administration, finance and legislation committee will meet at 8 p.m.

Better transit, communication proposed here

by DANN GIRE

The sign says: "This is not a season to be mealy-mouthed or to mince matters; the times are precarious and perilous."

This quote, from a newspaper published in 1776, was one of several on the walls in Elk Grove High School Saturday as more than 180 persons turned out for "Town Meeting '76," an exercise in grass roots government.

And as for the mealy-mouthedness and mincing of matters, Elk Grove residents left them behind to come through with avowed awareness in local government after pointing out key problem areas in the village.

AFTER A FULL day of discussion and workshops on the village's most pressing needs, residents presented three economic proposals:

- A study to select the most economical transit system followed by a referendum to ask voters to provide necessary funding.

- Public meetings and surveys of local civic groups to determine transportation needs of the community.

- Cuts in village administrative expenses through reduction in budgets, work week and obtaining volunteer help.

Political improvements residents said are needed include more "grass roots" participation, better communication with the government and more person-to-person contact through establishment of a village public relations official.

The town meeting also showed that citizens wanted a single school district, rather than separate elementary and high school districts, better utilization of senior citizens' resources and strengthening of the council of service organizations in Elk Grove.

"Town Meeting '76," an official Bicentennial event, was an all-day affair beginning at 9 a.m. with morning study sessions to determine Elk Grove Village's biggest problems. Afternoon study groups then tackled the problems for workable answers.

Work groups also wrote a village song to the tune of "East Side, West Side" and developed a village symbol comprised of two triangles one each representing youth and the wise encircled with an arrow cutting across the diameter. The symbol theme is "Young and Wise, Unite for Progress."

While the regular town meeting was being conducted, the smaller members of society, the kids, were preparing their own list of goods and bads about the village.

Among the "liked" things were fresh air, forest preserves, nice police and firemen, not many fights between kids, space for playing and most of the teachers who were "nice."

On the list of things the kids really thought could be improved were: not enough stores for young people, tough BB gun laws, restrictions on pets in apartment, too many R- and X-rated movies, lack of indoor ice and roller skating rinks, and a need for bike trails.

Mom Loses 74 Pounds

Credits Conway Diet

Sharon Martin, a busy housewife and mother of four children who had a serious overweight problem for 16 years, has lost 74 pounds in 7 months following the Conway Diet Program. "I attribute my success to several things: the motivation I received at the weekly seminars, the support and encouragement of my family, the Conway 1000 calorie diet, and the terrific recipes in the Conway diet cookbook," says Sharon, who is delighted with her new appearance.

Test scores—where are they leading us?

by JUDY JOBBITT

Are we raising a nation of dummies or are standardized test scores — which are plummeting — no longer a valid tool for measuring student aptitude?

Test scores have been on a downhill trend here and across the nation for a decade, yet educators refuse to say youngsters aren't as smart as they used to be.

The test score trend has everyone in a dither, and, depending on the expert on hand, blame is cast in various directions.

AFTER A four-month analysis of standardized testing, researchers David Wiley of the University of Chicago and Annegret Harnischfeger, a former research associate with the university, concluded the drop in scores accurately measures a drop in student achievement.

They also eliminate two excuses commonly given for the drop — changes in the tests and in the student population taking the tests.

"We've definitely concluded it wasn't the tests and there hasn't been a change in the kind of kids taking the tests," Wiley said. "The tests are the same as they've always been."

He said the "strongest lead" they found to explain the drop is a "profound change in academic course takings. If the enrollment in academic courses diminishes then the tests on those skills should show the performance going down."

HE SAID THE study showed that students aren't taking as many courses — academic or nonacademic — as they used to.

"There has been an increase in the number of specialty type courses being taken, but it doesn't balance out with the drop in academic courses," he said.

The study also shows that the decline has been even more dramatic in recent years, affects all student areas, is national in scope and occurs at all levels of study from the fifth grade through senior year in high school. A closer look at the testing mechanism and test comparison over the years suggests student achievement has, in some cases, slipped greater than the test scores reveal, the researchers conclude.

Local educators disagree, insisting that even though test scores are down students are brighter than ever.

"We're being led down the primrose path if we blindly accept the test scores without trying to understand the results," said Marvin Christensen, High School Dist. 214 coordinator of math and science who works with the testing program.

CHRISTENSEN said despite the lower scores "there's no doubt that the senior class this year is much brighter and has had more experiences than the Class of 1960."

Roderick McLennan, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for instruction agrees: "I think if a test were made up (Continued on Page 4)

18-year-old serious on winning library race

The next eight months will swoop down upon us with a unique piece of Americana. Not anywhere in the world can you find a game quite like, "The U.S.A. Political Fistfight."

There are just a few hard and set rules. One of them is that the candidate must promise the public anything, then deliver whatever will satisfy the big interest groups.

Some politicians pursue a theory that whatever will line their pockets must also be good for the public. This is known as supporting public welfare.

So they buy a spot someplace high on the ballot and then ride a roller coaster into office.

THAT'S WHY IT'S such a delight to find a distraction like Paul Karlsen alive and breathing amidst all this.

Paul is one of seven candidates for the Palatine Public Library Board. But he's one of just two men seeking a two-year term in the April 13 election.

There was the option of a six-year term. He did not choose that. "If I can't get something accomplished in two years," said Paul, "then I'm not going to get anything accomplished in six."

Besides, six years would be one-fourth of his life. That's quite a lot to sacrifice. Paul might not even live in Palatine six years from now.

AFTER ALL, Paul will hopefully be graduated from college in a little more than three years.

By now, you should have gotten the idea that Paul Karlsen is still a young man.

He's 18 years old, a freshman studying pre-law at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, and dead serious about this business of seeking a library board position.

Judiciary panel to weigh ethics code proposals

Proposals for a village ethics ordinance will be reviewed tonight by the Mount Prospect judiciary committee.

Trustee Michael H. Minton, chairman of the committee, said he has copies of six different ethics ordinances which will be given to the committee members for review. He said he will poll the committee on the need for an ethics ordinance and ask what areas it should cover.

The meeting will begin at 8 p.m. at the village hall, 100 S. Emerson St.

MAYOR ROBERT D. Teichert was the first to call for an ethics ordinance. Last May he said the ordinance would serve as a reassurance to voters that their village government is honest.

Since that time, several trustees have balked at the idea of an ethics ordinance, particularly one that requires disclosure of income tax returns.

"Some trustees have commented that they will not disclose their federal and state income tax returns, and any ethics ordinance should not include that," Minton said.

Trustee Theodore J. Wattenberg was the first to speak out against income disclosure, saying it would give the community a "false sense of security."

SEVERAL MONTHS AGO, Wattenberg asked that the matter be allowed to die in committee. He said the income tax returns actually show little about where officials make their money. He said the public, however, gets the feeling that those who file their returns have nothing to hide.

Other trustees expressed their unhappiness with disclosure when it was first proposed by Teichert. Only the mayor and Trustee E. F. Richardson disclosed 1974 income tax returns, while Trustee Richard N. Hendricks disclosed his 1973 returns.

Trustee Leo Floros declined to disclose, saying it would be an invasion of privacy. Trustee Edward B. Rhea Jr. and Minton said their 1974 returns did not deal with their earnings while in office.

Other items to be discussed at tonight's meeting include Minton's proposed apartment licensing tax, which is designed to raise additional revenue for the village.

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

Like most other sports-minded 7-year-olds this time of year, Bobby Libit is itching to flip off the TV set and begin practicing on the baseball field.

But Bobby's turns at bat this spring will hold a special significance — the Buffalo Grove youngster is recuperating from a rare viral disease. Less than a year ago, doctors gave him three months to live.

Thanks to a special bone marrow transplant done in a Seattle, Wash., hospital last August, Bobby now is "getting the TV schedule down to a T" and keeping his fingers crossed that he'll be able to try out for the Buffalo Grove Recreation Assn. baseball team.

RIGHT NOW, Bobby must wear a mask when he leaves the house because of a temporary loss of immunity to disease. "He's feeling pretty bored and confined, but we've signed him up for the team this April," said Mrs. Libit.

Bobby was stricken with the rare viral disease aplastic anemia last summer. Doctors at the Loyola University Medical Center only gave the boy three months to live, but thanks to an experimental operation in which Bobby's 16-year-old brother, Jerry, donated bone marrow, the youngster is now "completely cured," Mrs. Libit said.

Bobby returned from Seattle in October, but his parents are still saddled with medical bills estimated at more than $15,000. Community organizations and individuals set up a Bobby Libit fund at a local bank, and the $7,000 donated so far "is just unreal — we've been able to keep up to date with the bills, and we would have been lost otherwise," Mrs. Libit said.

Despite his temporary lack of defense against colds and sore throats, Bobby is physically "fit as a horse," his mother said. He is keeping up with his schoolwork with the aid of tutoring at home, and he's scheduled to enter third grade at Joyce Kilmer School this fall.

"WE'RE REALLY VERY lucky," Mrs. Libit said with a sigh. "We've gained a lot of friends, and we've seen many cases a lot worse than Bobby's."

Now that the ordeal is over, the Libits can even joke about the operation. A relative of the family discovered that their dog had the same disease, and wanted to know more about the Seattle hospital.

"I told Bobby that he should be the donor," Mrs. Libit said with a smile for her son. Would he be willing?

Look for comet Saturday

by GERRY KERN

Early risers today may have caught a glimpse of Comet West, that surprising visitor from space glowing in the eastern sky. However, for those Northwest suburban residents who missed it, another performance is scheduled for 5 a.m. Saturday.

Discovered in November by Richard West, an astronomer at the European Southern Observatory's headquarters in Geneva, the comet has become brighter than expected. Its performance makes up, perhaps, for the monumental flop that was Comet Kohoutek, billed as the "comet of the century" in 1973-74.

Last week, thick overcast skies spoiled a chance for milkmen, paper-

boys and other early risers to seek Comet West at its brightest.

Larry Ciupik, an astronomer at Adler Planetarium, said the comet should appear as a "fuzzy star" with a fairly short tail. (Comet is derived from the Greek word "kometes," which means "hairy star.") The astronomer said a pair of binoculars will help sky-watchers locate the comet.

"Last Monday was about the only clear morning, and it was a spectacular comet then," said Ciupik. "It was quite bright and the tail was about 10 degrees long."

Ciupik said the comet is less bright now and its tail shorter, but the viewing may be just as good because it rises earlier, when the sky is blacker.

Comet West soared around the sun late last month, reaching perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Feb. 25. Excited by the sun's energy, the ball of ice and dust formed a large tail pointing away from the sun.

Very little is actually known about the nature of comets, making difficult predictions about what they'll do. Comet Kohoutek was a good example of that.

One of the largest comets in terms of material composition, Kohoutek was to have given observers a spectacular show — one which would rival Halley's Comet, history's most celebrated cometary traveler. But it fizzled.

Comet West, on the other hand, has done better than expected, although it is much smaller.

Scientists estimate that Comet West is only one of 200,000 comets in the solar system that are relics from the creation of the sun and the planets. It is theorized that a large "cloud" of comets orbit the sun in the far reaches of space.

Some scientists believe comets, flung back into space by their encounters with the sun, return to regions perhaps eight years away, taking tens of thousands of years to complete their orbits.

Wanted: a new home, different life

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Patty is 16 going on 17, and life has been something less than a carnival for her. But, things are getting better.

While many of her high school friends were absorbed in the carefree life of adolescence, like dates and parties, Patty was going through her own little hell.

She took refuge within the walls of Elk Grove High School, where she is a senior, where good times and smiles could be shared.

BUT, THERE WAS always the return home where alcoholic parents were at each other's throats. The family foundation slowly cracked, ending in a broken home.

The advice and reassuring companionship Patty needed was not easily found. Just as Omni-House: Youth Services Bureau in Wheeling was launching its transitional living program, Patty walked in the agency's front door.

She is one of the first teen-agers, who are products of broken homes or have troubles with their parents to be "matched" with a suburban adult who is eager to lend a helping hand.

Patty's roommate for the past two months has been Sue McCaw, Des Plaines, a 24-year-old divorcee who understands the conflicts in Patty's life. She once had some of her own.

UNFORTUNATELY, Omni-House officials say there are too many teen-agers like Patty in the Northwest suburbs and not enough adults like Sue.

"Learning to live with other people is something that everyone has to learn. But when you come from a broken home or you've had problems as a teenager, it's more difficult," said Michele Williams, director of the Omni-House transitional living program.

The new program allows older teens to live for between six months and a year with a single person or married couple in the suburbs before going out to live on their own. The teen learns the skills of independent living: how to manage money, sign leases, pay monthly bills, keep house, do laundry and cook meals.

Omni-House recently received a child welfare agency license from the Illinois Dept. of Children and Family Services to coordinate the transitional living program, which is available to all suburban residents.

IT IS ALSO offering a youth advocacy program, where a volunteer adult spends about 15 hours each week with troubled youths, offering companionship and counseling. A long-term foster-care program places wards of the state or local children without homes into foster homes in the community.

"Not all of the kids we're dealing with in these programs have been in trouble. Many of them just have no families," Ms. Williams said.

However, the transitional living program, the first of the three child welfare programs to be started, has been slow to get off the ground. Only three youths have been placed in homes.

"There is a growing need for this type of program. Yet, people say they are too busy with their own lives to get involved with someone else's, especially a teenager's," she said.

BUT, SUE MCCAW has a "special interest" in "confused teens like Patty," she said.

"A woman helped me to get my head straight and took me into her home when I left my own house at 18. Then, I had bitter feelings toward my mother," Ms. McCaw said.

"She helped me to see and understand my mother and other people. She helped me learn to do things for myself. She was just there to help me. Now, I want to do the same for teenagers with those problems," she said.

The two women have adjusted to each other quickly. They don't get in each other's way, yet share a lot of good conversation. Ms. McCaw is not interested in keeping track of Patty's every move, and Patty doesn't care about her roommate's social life.

The Mount Prospect Chamber of Commerce is backing efforts to get the size of the court load reduced at the local branch of the Cook County Circuit Court.

"The chamber board recognizes the lack of parking facilities in the central business section, both on-and-off-street," a letter to Village Mgr. Robert J. Eppley states. "This situation is becoming more acute daily and is aggravated by the holding of state and county cases in the courtroom at 112 E. Northwest Hwy."

Signed by C.O. Schlaver, chamber executive director, and member George B. Anderson, the letter calls for a reduction in the court call and development of other parking facilities by the village.

The letter was prompted by village board discussion of whether the court lease at the village's public safety building should be terminated. Trustee Leo Floros called for serious board consideration of the matter in his fire and police committee.

EPPLEY SAID he has started getting letters in support of solving local parking problems by limiting the court call.

Eppley said village officials are planning to contact Chief Judge James Geocaris and seek a reduction in the state police call at the local court. The court currently is in session five days a week.

Police Chief Ralph J. Doney said the village might cut court time to one day a week if the state police and tollway police cases are moved elsewhere.

The chamber also is asking renewed

BUT OPEN exchange of feelings, emotions and ideas has been "a wonderful learning experience for both of us," McCaw said.

"I think the program is very important and should be continued. I plan to take in another teenager once Patty feels she's ready to go out on her own," she said.

Omni-House receives state funds for the transitional living program to reimburse participants for the shelter and food for the teens.

"Will that act as an incentive to get people in the program? I don't know, Ms. Williams said. "But this program is a thing of the future. There is a growing need for people to take care of people. You'd think there would be more people who care."

Gail Carlson a top aide

Mount Prospect's Gail Carlson, 1807 Laurel Dr., plans to become a doctor — and she's getting her first real experience in the medical field as a Cheerie-Aide at Holy Family Hospital, Des Plaines. Obviously, she's doing well in the position because her fellow teenage volunteers workers recently named her Cheerie-Aide of the Year, 1976.

"I was surprised," said Gil, "because I served as a Cheerie-Aide captain and had to give assignments which weren't always what the girls wanted. I'm gratified and flattered that my fellow workers thought I deserved the honor."

Gail, 16, has given almost 800 volunteer hours to the local hospital over the past two years. She squeezed the time in between a myriad of other activities. At Hersey High School, she's on the debate team, in the German Club, works on the school newspaper, is a girls' physical education leader and has been involved in the Archaeology Club.

THE REGULAR monthly meeting for participants in Mount Prospect's Bicentennial Fourth of July parade is today at 7:30 p.m. in the Community Center, 600 S. See Gwun Ave. All groups, clubs, organizations, businesses and churches who expect to be part of the Independence Day parade July 5 should be represented.

Those planning floats are reminded that information forms are available by calling the Chamber of Commerce office, 398-6616, or by writing to P.O. Box 53, Mount Prospect.

THE TALENT TEA to select a few more exhibitors for the Unique Boutique will be held at 1 p.m. Thursday at the Mount Prospect Community Center, 600 S. See Gwun Ave. Craftsmen should bring samples to be judged.

MORE THAN 100 will attend a "Marchfest" Saturday, to celebrate the 20th anniversary of St. Paul Lutheran Church's Married Couples Club, said Esther Busse of the host committee.

THE MOUNT PROSPECT Jaycees are issuing a general invitation to the community to attend the organization's annual public affairs banquet March 26 at Old Orchard Country Club. Awards will be presented to Mount Prospect's Outstanding Junior Citizen and Outstanding Young Educator. A Distinguished Service Award also will be presented.

Tickets for the banquet are $7. Call Ray Lenberg, 253-7935, to make reservations.

The Jaycees recently presented a check for $1,300 to senior citizen representatives to help furnish the television lounge of the new senior center planned for the old library building.
